Threatcon Delta initiated after attacks

USAKA downgrades to Threatcon Charlie

USAKA department heads, site managers and specialists sat around the conference table quietly around 8 a.m. Wednesday morning, mulling over the day's terrorist strikes on the World Trade Center in New York City and the Pentagon in Washington, D.C.

"The nation and community is in a state of shock," said Col. Curtis L. Wrenn Jr., USAKA commander.

On the table for discussion: What to do following a Department of Defense directive to go to Threatcon Delta, the highest security level a post can maintain.

"People might ask why establish Threatcon measures after-the-fact?" Wrenn said. "Well, you can never tell where a terrorist will choose to stop, so you check and make sure you're not vulnerable."

The day started early for the commander and company, most getting calls around 2 a.m., telling them to turn on their televisions. Central

Community in disbelief over terrorist acts

Disbelief. Phone calls at 2 a.m., 3 a.m., 4 a.m. Surreal scenes of smoking, crumbling buildings. Disbelief.

"Everybody got calls this morning," said Paul King, shaking his head in shock as perhaps the worst tragedy in American history unfolded on a big screen TV in Café Pacific Wednesday. The Sodexo USA general manager and the rest of the company's managers and a handful of Marshallese workers arrived early to prepare breakfast. Most of the Marshallese employees were stuck on Ebeye, as all egress and ingress to the installation was shutdown per Threatcon Delta procedures, which were initiated worldwide for all Department of Defense installations, including USAKA.

"All the managers are working the kitchen, doing the dishes," King said.

Attacks prove people are at their best in the worst times

My six-month-old daughter is having a terrific week. She's learning to hold herself up, push-up style, in anticipation of crawling, I think. She's learning to play with our cats, giggling as she slaps hand to paw with the fat, fuzzy resident of our household. And she smiles and laughs every time she sees a friendly face.

She's blissfully unaware of this week's events, but she won't always be that young and innocent.

A lot has been written about how America lost its innocence to terrorism on Sept. 11.

We've known about terrorism before this week. We've even been hit by it, with the 1993 bombing of the World Trade Center and the 1994 Murrah Federal Building bombing in Oklahoma City. Dharan, Kenya, Tanzania, the USS Cole — all sites of terrorist attacks, too. Previous events, however, don't make these latest attacks any easier to deal with, and they really don't compare.

On Sept. 11, we lost more than 260 people on board aircraft, between 100 and 800 at the Pentagon and thousands in New York.

The numbers are impossible to fathom. We can look at a car bomb that kills 20 people and say, "Why?" We feel regret and sadness. But how do you multiply the emotion felt for 20 to that felt for thousands?

Take your average small town in America, wipe it off the face of the map, and you'd have about the same effect.

But with every horror story, you have stories of heroism. People risking their lives to save others — hundreds of New York firefighters and police killed while responding to the victims of the attack. Who knows what really happened on the plane that crashed in Pennsylvania? And what of the thousands who have pitched in since the attack?

I'm reminded of the saying, "People are at their best, when things are at their worst." I believe that, though I wish it didn't have to come to "the worst" for people.

I've also seen editorials question what we're doing on Kwajalein — missile testing. One writer stated that National Missile Defense would have been useless on Sept. 11.

True. But just because terrorists picked an unconventional approach this time, doesn't eliminate the threat we're working to negate. A war on terror has a lot of fronts.

Some day I'll have to explain to my daughter that bad things happen and bad people roam the planet. I'll also tell her the world is generally a good place with good people protecting us against the bad. I just don't look forward to that conversation.

Terrorism can't be allowed to disrupt lives in negative ways

Now what?

The story is still being pieced together. We're still waiting for a name, a target for our vengeance. Don't think it's anything but revenge. You can couch our response in whatever politically correct terminology that comes to mind, but once we have evidence of who was responsible for that mass murder in New York City and Washington, D.C., you can bet retaliation will be swift and deadly.

We know that. But now what?

Shock and surrealism has slowly faded, giving way to anger. Anger not only for those murdered — our sympathy reaches out to those directly affected, though at best we can only have a vague sense of their pain — but outrage for the bludgeoning of our sense of security, the paranoia that must rise up like bile every time you step aboard an airplane or enter a crowded public building.

Here, on our little island paradise, so far removed from the shockwaves of destruction, is a sense of Catch-22 — apparently safe by virtue of our isolation, but helpless by virtue of our isolation. A phone call back home to make sure everybody is OK is reassuring, but how much more comforting is a hug from a father asking for reassurance from his son 7,000 miles away?

Now what? How many more times should we watch the airliner hurl itself into the World Trade Center tower? How many more recaps can we sit through before screaming at the TV, 'Enough! Enough!?' But you can't look away. You don't want to know the final number of how many are dead, but you wonder how much longer the tally will take.

The brutal shock to our psyches, to our daily routines is maddening. But we can't be overwhelmed — that's what they want. Only hours into this tragedy, the media pundits already began speculating on how the attacks would affect our future civil liberties. But we can't put ourselves in a cage — that's what they want.

Now what? Now we get back to work. Now we return to the ballfields. Now we visit our friends and turn off the TV for a little while.

Now what? Now we hug each other a little harder — but not just today and tomorrow. Everyday, because the most valuable lesson to be learned from these monstrous acts is that we are always vulnerable to tragedy. To be vulnerable is not to be weak, but to be compassionate, to appreciate our lives and each other.

Now what? Now we heal. Now we live.

Many find Kwaj connection to terrorist targets

By KW Hillis
Feature Writer

For many residents the news of terrorist attacks on New York City and Washington, D.C. was made more horrible because they didn't know the fate of family and friends near the epicenters of the attacks or possibly on the hijacked planes.

"I got a call from Cris [Lindborg's] sister, speaking in Spanish at 2 a.m.," said Sue Rosoff, who is house-sitting for the Lindborgs. Worried about Andrea Lindborg, who is working in New York City, the sister called to make sure her niece was OK.

Between calls trying to track down the Lindborgs, Rosoff said she sent an e-mail to her own cousin, Julie Wolf, who lives near the World Trade Center to see if Julie and her family was all right. Julie e-mailed her right back with good news. Meanwhile, one of the Lindborg's relatives was able to find out that Andrea Lindborg was unharmed and reported the news by phone.

It was one story on an island full of Kwajalein connections with the attacks.

Maggie Fuller saw the news reports when she awoke and went for her morning walk, not realizing her brother-in-law Brian Fuller, who works in New York, could be in danger.

"I didn't know until I got to work and Alan [Fuller, another brother-in-law] called me," Maggie Fuller said.

Alan Fuller didn't know anything about the attacks until he got to the Café Pacific at 7 a.m., where a big screen television showed the collapse of the World Trade Center towers.

"I don't have a TV or radio in my room," Alan Fuller said. "I did talk to a co-worker on the way in and asked how he was. He said, 'OK, considering someone wiped out the World Trade Center and the Pentagon.' I thought they were kidding."

Although Alan Fuller's big brother Brian lives in Connecticut, he works as a regional security manager for Macy's department store, about four miles from the World Trade Tower, Alan Fuller said.

"[Brian] takes the train in and switches trains underneath the World Trade Center," Alan Fuller said.

Arriving at work, Alan Fuller left a voice mail message on his brother's work phone in New York. He then alerted family members on the mainland and on island including his sister-in-law, Maggie.

At 9:20 a.m., Alan Fuller received an e-mail message from his brother Brian. It read, in part, "Hey, little brother ... it looks like a war

A chain-link fence cordons off the damaged area of the Pentagon near the heliport as fire and rescue workers and FBI and other crime scene personnel attend to their work Sept. 12 (CONUS time).

zone here."

Alan Fuller immediately forwarded the message to others in his family.

Ironically, Brian Fuller knows what a war zone looks like — he's a member of Special Forces Delta Team working against terrorist attacks.

Although a group of people from the Reagan Test Site, including RTS commander Lt. Col. Clarence Johnson Jr., was supposed to be at the Pentagon on Sept. 11, the commander's secretary, Debra Oglesby, wasn't worried when she arrived at work.

"I didn't get a phone call or hear the news," Oglesby said. "When I came into work I saw it was Threatcon Delta. I wondered what was going on."

More confusing to Oglesby was the voice mail messages awaiting her at work.

"I was listening to my voice mail messages and a relative of one of the ladies in D.C. called to let me know that [the traveler] was OK," Oglesby said. "What do you mean she's OK," I said to myself. Then I put it all together."

Soon, calls from various people, including RTS technical director Stan McMurtrie, reassured Oglesby that the Kwaj group had left earlier from D.C. and was already in California.

Former Kwajalein residents also accounted for their safety by calling or e-mailing. Nancy Jones, wife of former RTS commander Lt. Col. Raymond Jones, called Oglesby.

"She left the message around 3 a.m. saying her husband was all right," Oglesby said.

Others on island were worried about who could be traveling on the hijacked planes.

"We heard two of the [hijacked] flights originated in Boston, so we didn't know," said Jack Riordan, explaining that his brothers-in-law Joe and Tom Gardner were flying to Chicago from Boston that morning. "We were mostly worried about my wife's mother because she was at home not knowing where her sons were."

The Riordans had to wait until noon to find out about their relatives.

"We talked to Janice's mother at noon [Wednesday], that is when we discovered everyone was okay," Riordan said. "They had flown out of Boston just before those [hijacked] flights left."

Throughout Wednesday, stories of relatives and friends secure and safe and nowhere near the devastation surfaced as calls and e-mails flew approximately 7,500 miles between Kwajalein Atoll and the mainland.

Even though relatives and friends may not have been near New York City, the Pentagon or an airport, residents checked in with loved ones to find out how they were faring.

"I asked Shane if he was worried about the terrorists," Beverly Schmidt said when she called her daughter and nine-year-old grandson Shane in Detroit. "He said he wasn't worried because 'that's the president's job.'"

Unfortunately, there are family and friends here and around the world who still don't know the fate of their loved ones since the identity of the victims from the hijacked planes, the World Trade towers and the Pentagon have not all been determined or released.

Writing his brother Alan Fuller from a New York office where he had watched the World Trade towers collapse, Brian Fuller stated, "Life as we know it has changed."

To donate money to the Red Cross for assisting victims of the attacks, call 1-800-HELP-NOW. To donate to the United Way fund to help the victims of Tuesday's attacks and their families, call (212) 251-4035. To make donations to the Salvation Army for helping the victims, call 1-800-SAL-ARMY.

Residents express disbelief, horror over terrorist attacks ...

Meanwhile, over coffee, eggs and biscuits, residents sat glued to the TV, as CNN broadcast additional information about the apparent terrorist attacks at the World Trade Center in New York City and the Pentagon in Washington, D.C. Stateside reports indicated four commercial airplanes were hijacked, three of them used as weapons to destroy the WTC twin towers and severely damage the Pentagon.

"I just heard this morning," said Jordan Pemberton at breakfast. He was a rare case, however, as many on Kwajalein and Roi-Namur received early morning phone calls from stateside relatives and friends.

James Curtis said his father called him early that morning, but the call was almost dream-like. It wasn't until later did the reality sink in.

"I couldn't believe it," he said.

No one could.

"I used to be able to see the World Trade Center from my bedroom window on a clear day," said Dotty Miller, watching a TV in the Community Activities office. "When [husband] Bob told me, I didn't believe him."

The Weisrocks sat glued to their TV set all morning until they couldn't stand it any longer. They sought respite at the library, which opened for normal business hours Wednesday, though the front door was locked until patrons presented identification badges.

"It's hard to believe that something like this could happen in the United States," said James Weisrock, a J.A. Jones employee who usually takes an early morning flight to Roi for work. All intratoll flights were cancelled Wednesday.

'Like something out of a movie'
The strikes against America immediately brought analogies to the 1941 attack against Pearl Harbor by the Japanese. About 2,400 people were killed that fateful Dec. 7, mostly service members. The number of dead from the two attacks is unknown at this time, but estimates put the number in the thousands.

"We're just devastated," said Vanessa Longhurst, who was discussing the implications of the attacks with librarian Pat Wanslow and assistant librarian Susannah Jones. Longhurst said she was awakened by friends in Australia around 2:30 a.m. and never got back to sleep.

"It's like something right out of a movie,"

Residents flock to Ten Ten Wednesday morning, apparently anticipating supply shortages because of the cancellation of all air service. Commercial air service is slowly returning to normal.

Jones said.

But no Hollywood endings, no Bruce Willis to save the day. Besides destroying the two WTC towers, a third building collapsed about six hours later. A fourth building went down Thursday and several more are threatening to collapse. As many as 200 firefighters, initially on the scene, are believed to have perished in New York City alone. Damage estimates at the Pentagon are pending; more than 100 are believed dead there.

Wanslow said she was incredulous when she got an early morning call from a stateside friend. But after seeing the confirmation for herself on TV, she immediately called family back home to make sure everyone was OK.

"You don't feel comfortable until you touch base with everyone back home," she said.

Being human

The island itself was eerily quiet Wednesday, as more than 1,200 Marshallese workers could not get to work because the Dock Security Checkpoint was closed off. Roi was similarly shut down, with volunteers employed to help run such services as Café Roi, according to King. Marshallese employees returned to work Thursday.

One place that wasn't quiet Wednesday was the Ten Ten store, where residents flocked after 10 a.m. to stock up on groceries despite assurances by officials that regular shipments would resume Thursday.

Paul Divinski, Retail manager, said he wasn't surprised by the rush, considering the circumstances, but was very encouraged by the civility of the patrons as check-out lines reached deep into the aisles.

"This has gone very smoothly. Everybody has been very nice and accommodating," he said.

Since other facilities were closed, employees were shuffling back and forth from Surfway and Sunrise Bakery bringing in additional supplies, according to Divinski. He said that no one was being allowed to hoard groceries. "We need to share. We need to make sure we have enough for everybody."

The Rev. John Dorr and Father William Sullivan offered residents a chance to share their emotions at a memorial service at Island Memorial Chapel Wednesday afternoon.

"We live in a difficult world and bad things happen," said Dorr, who is often asked to have the answers in such crises.

"I don't know 'why' entirely. From my perspective, God is still in control," he said. "There are answers, there is comfort, there is hope."

Attacks cause schedule juggling

By Jim Bennett
Editor

Terrorist attacks in New York City and Washington, D.C. have forced changes in local air schedules.

Local mission-related air operations resumed Thursday as military aircraft, including the 1900Ds and Huey UH-1 helicopters, may fly despite the FAA ban on air activity, said Maj. Matt Reed, USAKA Supply and Transportation officer.

ATI is scheduled to arrive tomorrow at 10:40 a.m. Contact the AMC office for further information.

"The USAKA Transportation office is in contact with HQ AMC to determine when the C-141 aircraft will resume support flights," Reed said. "Aloha and Continental flights are still on hold due to international flight security issues."

Currently, there's no timeline for when service will resume. Because of international flight restrictions, Air Marshall Islands will not resume operations until further security guidance is received from the FAA regarding international flights, according to Reed.

USAKA is following all of the increased airport security measures as directed by the FAA, Reed said, adding that there will be delays during check-in.

"When commercial and AMC air service is resumed, there will be very stringent security checks," Reed added, noting that items like pocket knives, small key chain knives and even kitchen utensil type knives will not be allowed on board the plane with the passenger.

Reed suggested those with travel concerns contact the commercial services desk at 52660 or call the airlines at their respective 1-800 numbers.

National news reports indicate airline passengers can expect many changes in commercial air service in the near future. Some state-side flights resumed today.

EAP available to help employees deal with tragedy

From RSE Human Resources

Due to the recent tragic events resulting from terrorist attacks stateside, some employees may experience emotional stress and other reactions that might impact their personal life and their performance on the job. To assist them at this critical time, Raytheon does provide employees and their household family members with an Employee Assistance Program.

The EAP is staffed by experienced clinical personnel and provides confidential, no-cost counseling for a broad range of problems. The EAP can be accessed either by calling the EAP, toll-free in CONUS, at 1-877-354-6892, or by contacting the local on-island counselor at 51811.

Wrenn promises to return 'sense of normalcy' soon ...

Pacific Network had already cut to live coverage of the terrorist attacks and would continue to run the coverage on both channels through today.

By 3 a.m., Lt. Col. Steve Morris, USAKA chief of Operations, was at headquarters brainstorming the effects of Threatcon Delta.

Meanwhile, Jim Mawhar of Kwajalein's Federal Aviation Administration office was on the phone with stateside FAA officials finding out about the grounding of all commercial airliners and the effects on Kwajalein. In short, Bucholz Army Airfield was closed.

By 8 a.m., when the Crisis Management team convened, most had an idea what their departments were looking at for the day and possibly further on in the future.

"We're fortunate we've practiced this recently, but now we're, no kidding, doing this," Morris told the group.

The first priority was safety.

"We've closed off the pipelines in here, by sea and air," Morris said. "We've isolated ourselves from outside threats."

That said, Maj. Mark Harmon, USAKA provost marshal, outlined the Delta procedures for installation security, among them locking unoccupied buildings, checking packages, checking the outside of buildings for suspicious items and moving vehicles 50 feet away from buildings.

"These have to be done," Harmon said. "We don't have military personnel to draw from. This has got to be a team effort." Added Sgt. Donnell Jones of the Provost Marshal's Office, "This is not limited to CIS. If you're the senior person in your facility, you need to check it."

The Threatcon message resulted in one early morning discovery of a suspicious package at the Reef BQ. The package turned out to be Tiki torches, but security and emergency officials were gratified that the public was paying attention.

The group also focused on public information and transportation.

"We have to keep the public informed," Morris said.

The command focused its immediate communication efforts on "the crawl," the messages written across the bottom of the television screens; a special edition of the Roller; and a lunchtime address by Wrenn on local radio.

"I assure you that I will do everything possible to return a sense of normalcy as quickly as possible to Kwajalein and Roi, and to our Marshallese workforce and neighbors," Wrenn said.

The command also embraced technology, utilizing an e-mail network to send out periodic updates on special hours of operations for local outlets and events, to name a few.

By 8 a.m. Wednesday, all transportation — air and sea — had been shut down, including the flights between Roi and Kwajalein and the ferries for Marshallese working on Kwajalein and Roi.

Wrenn authorized contractors to pay for the day employees who were unable to travel to work because of the restrictions. Travel restrictions were lifted Thursday for badged workers, Marshallese students and domestics. Guest sponsorship, sports and religious activities, however, remain suspended until further notice.

The commander also allowed the Marine Department to move a fuel tanker out of the harbor and bring the Barge Islander to the pier. But with the majority of Marshallese stevedores unable to come to work, unloading operations were delayed 24 hours. That forced the Marine Department to push back an operation to move rocket fuel from Meck.

Canceled intra-atoll flights left two power plant workers stranded on Meck, as well, though they had a place to stay and ate at the Meck Café.

Glory Trips 176 and 177, scheduled for Friday, were delayed indefinitely, though at first it appeared the operation might still be a go as late as Thursday afternoon.

"Today was an Army family team building day, in its truest sense," said LuAnne Fantasia, of the USAKA Public Affairs office. "It doesn't require a uniform. It's not about rank. On Kwajalein, it's civilian contractors working and leading, rolling up their sleeves and making things happen because they care. It's their Army installation, too, and they kept it running today in the face of adversity."

Pentagon gets back to business

By Jim Garamone

American Forces Press Service

WASHINGTON, Sept. 12, 2001 — The Pentagon is open for business even as urban search and rescue teams comb the area a hijacked jet rammed into Sept. 11.

Federal Emergency Management Agency and military engineer teams entered the Pentagon in search for survivors. Fire still burns in the roof of the five-sided building.

The incident commander, Fire Chief Ed Plaugher of Arlington County, Va., told reporters today he has no idea how many casualties there might be in the terrorist attack. On Sept. 11, he had said the number of dead could be as high as 800, but noted it was a "very rough estimate."

Thousands of Pentagon employees streamed into the building today to report for work. The smell of smoke pervaded even the undamaged areas. Of the building's 10 corridors, the area from Corridors 2 to 6 are closed. Offices are doubling up in the undamaged areas.

"First and foremost, the Department of Defense is open for business," Pentagon spokeswoman Torie Clarke said during a morning press conference today. "We're operating and functioning very well."

Clarke said the department's priorities are to care for the injured and the dead and their families. Pentagon officials are also working closely with the president and the national security team to "ensure the safety of the American people and our men and women in uniform around the world," she said.

Pentagon officials are also working closely with law enforcement and intelligence agencies to determine who was responsible for the attacks in New York and here and what the U.S. response will be.

DoD has set up a Pentagon Family Assis-

Smoke and flames rose over the Pentagon at about 10 a.m. Wednesday following a suspected terrorist crash of a commercial airliner into the side of the building. Part of the building hit collapsed. The building was evacuated, as were other federal buildings in the Capitol, including the White House.

tance Center at the Sheraton Crystal City Hotel at 1800 Jefferson Davis Highway in Arlington, Va. "This will fold into one place all the family assistance efforts for the department," said David Chu, undersecretary of defense for personnel and readiness.

This is the place for all family assistance — civilian and military. Officials asked families not to go to the Pentagon for information.

DoD will release a phone number once it is established. Chu emphasized that once it is available, the number would be just for the families, and asked that friends not call the number and tie up the lines. He said specialists in dealing with such tragedies are manning the center. Local chaplains, social workers and medical personnel have been augmented by personnel from Norfolk, Va. These people dealt with the aftermath of the terrorist attack on the destroyer USS Cole last October.

Hundreds of firefighters are still working to extinguish the blaze in the Pentagon roof. Fire officials said the construction of the Pentagon has contributed to this "very stubborn blaze." The Pentagon's roof consists of a layer of masonry, topped by wood, topped by slate. The officials said the fire has been hard to control because it has ignited the wood and is traveling between the concrete and slate layers. Firefighters are bringing in experts and special equipment to deal with the blaze.

The Army is the executive agent for military assistance for the disaster. All services are cooperating in providing some security, medical aid and some search capabilities.

Some 2,800 Virginia, Maryland and District of Columbia National Guardsmen have been called up to help with the disaster.

Defense Secretary Donald H. Rumsfeld is meeting with President Bush, Vice President Cheney, Secretary of State Colin Powell and the rest of the national security team.

important for us to remember them here today ... I ask you to say a short, simple prayer. Pray not that your will be done, but that His will be done."

Sullivan recounted the dark days of Pearl Harbor in 1941 and the assassination of President John F. Kennedy in 1963 and compared them to Wednesday's attacks.

"This is one of the darkest 'Good Fridays' ... But with every 'Good Friday' there is an 'Easter Sunday.' The elimination of terrorism — that will be the blessing for this day."

Dorr talked of the victims, saying, "They were killed because they were Americans. They went to work for their country, not expecting to be casualties of war.

"Evil exists," he said. "There is right and wrong in the world and the forces of evil will continue to harass those who stand for truth and justice. But righteousness will triumph."

On Roi-Namur, resident Joe Woods helped lead a similar service.

"Things went well. About 15 people attended the service at the Tradewinds Theatre," Woods said in an e-mail to Dorr. "I started the service by saying a few words to help us get focused ... Then I read Psalm 46 and we had a few minutes of silence. Afterwards, we began praying together, with several people praying aloud. We closed by standing a few minutes in silence in dedication to those emergency services personnel who died trying to help the initial victims escape the WTC towers."

Residents join together in singing the "Star Spangled Banner" during a memorial service Wednesday afternoon at Island Memorial Chapel.

Community healing begins at chapel

By Jim Bennett
Editor

More than 350 residents joined USAKA commander Col. Curtis L. Wrenn Jr. and religious leaders in prayer for victims and a call for the end of terrorism Wednesday evening during a memorial service for the attacks in New York City and Washington D.C.

"The shadow of the angel of death has wounded the hearts of our people," said the Rev. John Dorr Jr., Protestant chaplain. "Our grief is profound."

Added Catholic chaplain, the Rev. William M. Sullivan, "We Americans, in the face of the inexplicable, have always bonded together to be a stronger nation."

Opening with the national hymn, "God of Our Fathers," and the national anthem, "The Star Spangled Banner," grim-faced participants sang with strong voices, despite occasional tears. Many shared hugs in the pews as they remembered the thousands of victims.

Wrenn opened his comments saying he had heard from Lt. Col. Ray Jones, former RTS commander who had PCSed to the Pentagon in July, and he was safe. Wrenn acknowledged that all Kwaj residents were affected by the tragedy in some way or another, but more so because of the isolation the island represents.

"We can't do anything to help — give blood or volunteer," he said. "That is why it is especially (See SPEAKERS, page 8)
