SEARCH CONTINUES

Jim Tramelli of St. Louis joins the search for the missing Makin Marines Wednesday morning. Tramelli also hopes the CILHI team can help him find his uncle, 2nd Lt. Virgil A. Tramelli, a B-24 navigator, who may also have been executed on Kwajalein.

Sgt. 1st Class Ted Taala, EOD tech with CILHI, adds another shovelful of dirt to a waiting wheelbarrow. A CILHI archaeologist says the team has covered about 40 percent of the area where it believes missing U.S. service members are buried.

CILHI team 40 percent through site; recovers scattered, possible remains

Dr. Greg Fox says there are a lot of reasons for him and the rest of the team from the U.S. Army Central Identification Laboratory in Hawaii to be optimistic as they continue the search for missing U.S. service members believed buried here during World War II.

Over the last few days, the 10-member team has found what a CILHI spokesperson called "possible" human remains.

"They still have to be sent to the lab to determine what they are," Ginger Couden said.

Nephew of missing B-24 aviator joins Kwajalein dig

The B-24 navigated by 2nd Lt. Virgil A. Tramelli rests off the coral coast of Majuro Atoll in just a few feet of water. The final resting place of the Air Force navigator and his crew is officially unknown, but there is at least one man who believes they are possibly buried with the nine Marine Raiders across from the Japanese Cemetery.

Jim Tramelli, the lost aviator's nephew, is on Kwajalein to find out if 11 years of research, phone calls and e-mails is about to pay off.

"This has been a big part of my life," said Tramelli, a native of St. Louis who is

Washington Redskins cheerleaders offer a variety of acts

By KW Hillis

Washington Redskins cheerleaders are not just about pom-poms and rah-rah. That myth was dispelled Saturday night when many Kwaj residents found themselves cheering and lining up for autographs at the end of the professionally done variety show at the Richardson Theater.

The show, highlighting singers, dancers and even a baton twirler, stopped at Kwajalein due to a set of happy circumstances, according to Steve Snider, Community Activities superintendent of Entertainment Services. Sponsored by the Department of Defense Armed Forces

Former Hourglass editor played role in telling Makin story

Pat Cataldo of your staff played a very strategic role in moving the event that is taking place on Kwajalein right now.

Several years ago Pat called me at my home — [unofficial Kwaj historian] Gene Sims gave her my phone number — and asked permission to put my account of the Makin Raid in the Hourglass. I granted permission, and Pat proceeded to publish it; however, before taking that action, she submitted the manuscript to a frequent Hourglass contributor for review.

This journalist had served as a reporter of war crimes trials in the Pacific and ... the reviewer returned a scathing review to Pat stating that in all his reportorial travels during the post-war era, he had never heard of such an event so it could not be the truth.

Pat sent me a copy of his review, as well as the man's address. I wrote the reviewer an equally scathing reply and never expected to ever hear from him again.

Lo and behold, a full year later, I received a letter from this journalist stating that he was dead wrong and had found a letter he received from a William P. Mahoney, Naval Judge Advocate in the [Japanese Admiral] Abe trial stating the events much as I had reported.

I subsequently, with the help of friends, located the youngest daughter of Mahoney, who had died in the spring of 1999. This daughter furnished an excerpt from her father's unprinted memoirs, which we subsequently used to gain additional information on the event.

The world needs to know of Pat's participation in the event.

Volunteers helped make fundraiser a success

I would like to extend my thanks and appreciation to the Executive Board of the American Legion for sponsoring the American Cancer Society Pre-Fundraiser Sunday night at the Legion Hall.

I would also like to thank the volunteers that gave their time and labor to make this event happen, especially Gwyne Copeland and Alan Taylor for their determination and persistence to get things done on very short notice, and to Better 'N Nothin' and The Zooks for volunteering their time and talent to provide the entertainment.

A good time was had by all.
Thanks again.

CILHI search brings out the best in media

National Geographic. Stars and Stripes. Soldiers Magazine. Ben Carson and Louis Zamperini. And, of course, the reason everyone has come — the U.S. Army Central Identification Laboratory team from Hawaii. This month has probably been one of the most exciting of my tenure here, not just from the perspective of being a resident, but certainly from a journalism angle as well.

And probably most refreshing has been the attitude of everyone involved. The folks at CILHI dig and sift day after day, really oblivious to all this media attention they've been getting. (More than one reporter on the scene at Kwaj does qualify as a media circus.) And our off-island media friends have been extremely friendly, genuinely interested in telling 'good news' stories.

It was, of course, an honor to meet Mr. Ben Carson and to see Mr. Louis Zamperini once again. They are a wealth of knowledge and experience, a rare breed of human beings who've lived such amazing lives and speak with such wondrous humility and passion.

These are good days to be on Kwaj.

Fox said the finds have been scattered in one area, not concentrated as they should be assuming a mass burial of at least nine bodies. "They're totally out of context," he said of the fragments recovered through a time-consuming process of digging and sifting through tons of compacted earth.

"I'm still optimistic," Fox added, explaining that, as expected, the site has been relatively pristine. "We haven't run into any major bomb craters."

However, diggers did encounter some unexploded ordnance Tuesday, slowing work by a couple of hours.

Ted Taala, EOD tech with CILHI, said nothing major was found, mostly fuses and a few cartridge cases, including one still full of propellant. Taala said he's surprised the team hasn't found more five-inch rounds based on the history of the area.

"We've only found pieces of five-inch rounds," he said.

The main objects of the search are nine Marines believed to have been executed by the Japanese in 1942. The mass grave may also contain the remains of several U.S. air crews that were forced down in the Pacific.

Fox estimated the team has searched through about 40 percent of its target. The work has picked up pace thanks to a steady stream of local volunteers and the recent hiring of 10 Marshallese laborers.

"Without the volunteers and the workers, we wouldn't be half as far as we are now," said Sgt. 1st Class Sean Bendele, CILHI team sergeant, eyes red from the constant swirl of dust where half the team and volunteers sift through the dirt with screens.

"We're having a little trouble with the dust," Fox conceded.

The team has about three weeks left before its scheduled departure.

A backhoe helps push along excavation at the CILHI site Wednesday morning.

World War II veterans Louis Zamperini and Ben Carson departed Wednesday afternoon for home after a long-weekend visit to Kwajalein Atoll, where they were the guests of honor at numerous events and co-stars in the National Geographic documentary about the CILHI excavation.

Fox said the visit by the duo was "intriguing and interesting" but it didn't help the team in terms of narrowing its search. But, he added, the visit was "confirmation that the Marines were here."

Now, it's just a matter of where.

Residents who wish to volunteer to help at the site can do so by calling USAKA Public Affairs at 51098.

Tramelli spent 11 years looking for uncle's remains ...

spending his one week on a tropical island shoveling dirt and sifting through rocks, hoping to bring home his uncle after nearly 60 years.

Tramelli explained that the search began in 1991, when his family was contacted by an archaeologist working for the RMI Historical Preservation Office. Dirk H.R. Spennemann, during the course of his study of the wrecks of the islands, traced the serial number of a B-24 located in shallow water between Laura Island and Ajola, in the northwest corner of the atoll. Spennemann identified the crew members and then contacted Tramelli's father.

Since then, Tramelli, 35, has been on the trail, getting to know the uncle he never met. A breakthrough occurred when he contacted a private research firm that charged him $60 to track down information about his uncle. Tramelli said he didn't hope for much when he paid the money, but the investment yielded a wealth of information, including a POW photograph of his uncle and crew members taken on Maloelap Atoll, just north of Majuro (see photo, at right).

The story of how his uncle ended up a prisoner on Kwajalein, as Tramelli pieced it together over the years, began at the end of 1943. Virgil, 28, a decorated airman in the 431st Bomber Squadron, 11th Bombardment Group, 7th Air Force, participated in a raid on Maloelap Atoll sometime around Dec. 30, 1943. The B-24 squadron of nine planes encountered about 30 to 40 Japanese Zeroes, according to Tramelli. One of the B-24s in Virgil's formation drifted out of line, he said, and when his uncle's plane tried to bring it back into formation, they were attacked by the Zeroes and pursued to Majuro, where they ditched the plane in a pre-arranged area.

"They picked that side of the island [because] it was the farthest spot from the so-called Japanese garrison," Tramelli said.

But a rescue plane from Tarawa in the Gilbert Islands, where the squadron refueled, was never sent, he explained, leaving his uncle and crew at the mercy of the Japanese. From Majuro, the aviators were taken to Maloelap Atoll and finally to Kwajalein, where they were likely executed only a couple of weeks before the Marshalls invasion by U.S. forces in February 1944.

Encouraged by his findings, Tramelli eventually contacted the U.S. Army Central Identification Laboratory in Hawaii. In a case of serendipity, CILHI had recently recovered the remains of Carlson's Raiders from Makin Atoll in the former Gilberts and was in the early stages of planning its expedition to Kwajalein to recover nine Marines believed to have been captured from that raid and transported here in 1942.

"[Tramelli] turned us on to the fact that there were B-24s there," said Tripp Wiles, World War II historian for CILHI, who spent about a year researching Makin history. He and Tramelli corresponded almost weekly, and sometimes daily, as they both worked to uncover the story.

"While he was digging, I was digging," Tramelli said.

One piece of evidence forwarded to Tramelli from CILHI is a March 12, 1946 memo to a Capt. Murphy from an unknown author. In the third paragraph, the writer mentions a case against Rear Admiral Kamada, who was accused of being behind a Jan. 24, 1944 execution of American fliers on Maloelap.

Then, he says, "There were two other groups of fliers claimed to have been sent to Kwajalein about the first of Jan. 1944, and were no doubt executed there."

The evidence, Tramelli said, says one of those crews included his uncle.

"I've known [Virgil is here] because I've read it," Tramelli said during a lunch break from digging Thursday, dirt filling the creases in his face. "It's imbedded in me."

Cheerleaders bring variety of backgrounds ...

Entertainment, the group arrived on Kwajalein after a string of appearances in Okinawa, Tokyo and Guam. They have been on the road since Jan. 7, and with some lag time before their next show in Honolulu, they were able to perform at Kwaj, Snider said.

Another plus is that the costs of having them come here are covered by AFE, said Simone Smead, Community Activities manager.

Saturday morning before the show, two cheerleaders, Tina Lancon and Melanie Treaner, along with their director, Donald Wells, were available for an interview.

Misconceptions about professional cheerleading abound, according to Treaner, a member of the variety show, who also just took on a full-time job as the marketing and event coordinator for the group.

"Are you real cheerleaders?" is a question they get a lot, she said. "We perform at all the games ... There are 10 home games and hopefully next year there will be more, because we'll be in the playoffs."

Another question: Is cheerleading their full-time occupation?

"This is actually an extra curricular activity," Treaner said. "We all do hold full-time jobs and have careers, and a lot of us are full-time students — so this is a hobby."

"I'm in commercial real estate in D.C.," Lancon said. "My job is very supportive."

There is a financial analyst, a pharmaceutical sales person and a manager for a computer technology company currently on the team, Treaner said.

"They are not on the current squad, but we have had law students and attorneys," Wells said, explaining that the current attorney for the Washington Redskins was a cheerleader for the last six years. "She went through undergrad, got her law degree and then got the job with the Redskins."

Although this is a "hobby," as Treaner put it, it is a very exhausting hobby, as evidenced by the Saturday night show. The 90-minute program included singing and baton twirling, along with high-energy dancing to swing, rock 'n' roll, jazz and other styles of music. The women changed costumes 15 times and got the audience involved as well.

One of 12 audience members participating in a swing dance, high school junior Tanner Duncan volunteered to do pushups on stage and also performed the hula to the cheers of many students in the back rows of the theater.

Groups of young children, some just toddlers and many between eight and 12 years old, sat right in front of the first row of seats and edged closer and closer to the stage. All the seating available at the Richardson Theater was full, and the overflow audience stood or brought chairs from home.

"It's more like a Broadway-style variety show than doing cheers; I've never done cheers," Treaner said, explaining that cheerleading is more like dancing.

The Washington Redskins cheerleaders variety show started their international touring for DoD in August 1999.

"Because they are cheerleaders from the nation's capital, I guess it makes sense they should be going on the tours, since we don't represent any individual state," Wells said.

That same year, the group toured the Balkans.

"We were actually the first civilians into Kosovo after the war was declared over," Treaner said.

In 2000, the group put on shows in Bahrain, Kuwait and Egypt.

Also known as the First Ladies of Football because they were the first cheerleading group formed for a professional football team in 1962, the cheerleaders have performed for corporations, hospitals and for DoD at Caribbean and European bases.

After Honolulu, the cheerleaders will fly out to the USS Washington docked in Norfolk, Va., to do a performance before the Super Bowl, Wells said.

The group will then trade in their shorts and T-shirts for heavy parkas when they tour military bases in Alaska for nine days in February.

"So we'll go from this to negative 40 degrees," Wells said.

The women have to take time away from their jobs or classes as well as be away from their families — three are married and one is engaged — and the work is strenuous, but it is worthwhile, Treaner said.

"It's very exhausting, but very rewarding," she said. "I was at the standing ovation in Kosovo — that was probably one of the neatest experiences in my life. I will remember it forever."

New from the Tape Escape

Jeepers Creepers — On a desolate country highway, two homeward-bound teens are nearly run off the road by someone in a beat-up truck. Later they see him shove what looks like a body down a sewer pipe. But when they stop to investigate, they discover something far worse than they expected in this movie that is said to deliver “sheer terror.” Rated R.

The Glass House — In this psychological thriller, when Ruby (Leelee Sobieski) and Rhett’s (Trevor Morgan) parents are killed in a car crash, they move to an incredible house in Malibu with old family friends. It seems to be the beginning of a new life for them, but Ruby stumbles on information that leads her to suspect that her new guardians might somehow be responsible for her parents’ deaths. Rated PG-13.

What’s the Worst That Could Happen? — In this comedic battle of wits, Kevin (Martin Lawrence) is caught red-handed trying to rob a mansion, but leaves empty-handed when the house’s owner, ruthless billionaire Max Fairbanks (Danny DeVito), spies Kevin’s ‘lucky’ ring and claims it as his own. With battle lines drawn, these two set out to ruin each other’s lives ... and succeed. Rated PG-13.

The Fast and the Furious — On the turbo-charged streets of Los Angeles, every night is a championship car race. Dominic Toretto rules the road with nitro-boosted fury, and he and his rival, Johnny Tran, are the boldest and best until a new, tough competitor shows up. Rated PG-13.

Brother — A yakuza gangster is exiled to Los Angeles after his crime boss is murdered in a Tokyo gang war. Arriving in L.A. with a bag of money and a bad attitude, he hooks up with his half-brother, the leader of a small-time drug ring, igniting a violent power struggle. Rated R.

Party to benefit DAN

2002 Scuba-Doo features private dinner, public auction and dance

From staff reports

The Kwajalein Scuba Club will hold its Scuba-Doo party to benefit DAN Feb. 3, beginning at 6 p.m. at the Yokwe Yuk Club.

DAN, or Divers Alert Network, is a non-profit group that promotes and researches dive safety. The 22-year-old organization also provides dive accident insurance and a 24-hour diving emergency hotline.

It is the only association that investigates medical issues affecting recreational diving, according to Doug Hepler, KSC member and former club safety and training officer.

“If you’ve used a dive computer, then you have benefited from DAN’s research. If you’ve come up from a successful dive, then you have benefited from DAN’s research,” Hepler said. “If you’ve ever had the misfortune of suffering from decompression sickness and were treated by a medical facility, your doctors probably called DAN’s emergency number and consulted with doctors who know the latest up-to-date information on how to treat DCS.”

Over the years, KSC has been a key supporter of DAN, Hepler noted. In 2000, the club raised about $15,000 for DAN and was selected that same year to participate in a research program that studies dive profiles.

Scuba-Doo 2002, sporting the theme “Sea Hunt,” kicks off with a dinner at 6 p.m. for ticket-holders. The party then opens to the public at large at 7:30 p.m. with a silent auction in the Jobwa room.

“Many great items and services will be available for bid,” said Amy LaCost, Scuba-Doo chairwoman. Among the items up for bid are scuba lessons, an authentic curry dinner, sailing trips, scuba gear, hotel stays in Pohnpei and Kosrae and about another 100 items.

DJ Neil Dye will spin music in Gilligan’s until midnight. Divers, non-divers and people who want to learn to dive are invited, LaCost said.

“This will be a fun and exciting evening, with games and door prizes,” she said. “It’s a great opportunity to help a truly deserving organization. If you don’t dive, this is a great way to meet an instructor. And you can get some great deals from the silent auction.”

For tickets or more information, call LaCost at 52681.

All profits go to DAN.

Thirteen soldiers win spots in Olympics

From Army News Service

WASHINGTON — Thirteen Army athletes and two coaches will be in the 2002 Winter Olympic Games that open Feb. 8 in Salt Lake City.

In addition, about 4,500 other service members will provide support to the Olympic games, to include security, communications, transportation, honor guards, military bands, explosive detection dog teams and logistical support.

The soldier-athletes will be on the men’s and women’s biathlon and the men’s four-man bobsled and women’s two-man bobsled teams. Soldiers captured nearly half the 27 possible slots on those teams.

Sgt. Lawton Redman and Spc. Jeremy Teela were named to the men’s biathlon team, and Spc. Andrea Nahrgang, Spc. Kara Salmela and Sgt. Kristina Sabasteanski were named to the women’s biathlon team after qualifying trials Dec. 29-30 and Jan. 2-3 at Soldier Hollow, Utah.

Fourth-graders reinvent the bedtime story

By Barbara Johnson

Feature Writer

It was a slumber party with a purpose. Instead of the traditional sleepover, Kwajalein fourth-graders held a "readover" last weekend.

Twenty-seven students, along with nine parents and three teachers, spent the night at school Monday for the second annual "Fourth-Grade Readover." Altogether the students read 5,256 pages from books they brought with them.

The main idea of the readover is to "encourage kids to read in their free time," said fourth-grade teacher Janice Riordan, who organized the event., similar to one she started when teaching in the states. "It's to instill the love of reading," she explained.

Beginning at 6 p.m., the students, along with nine parents and three teachers, read silently in half-hour segments interspersed with breaks for games, stories, drawing and talking about their books, Riordan said. During one break, fifth-graders Irene Furgeson, Cornelia Notarianni and Jessica Lojkar and third-grader Mamo Wase taught and demonstrated hula and stick dancing.

Everyone retired at 11 p.m., and in the morning they enjoyed a donut breakfast, signed a memory book and guessed the total number of pages read. Barlik Gold and Ali Powell both had the closest guesses and won gift certificates to the school store.

"They realize how much they have read," Riordan said.

Students who didn't wish to stay all night had the option of leaving at 11 p.m.

Teachers at the event were Riordan, fourth-grade teacher Ted Nykiel and art teacher Jane Christy. Volunteer parents were Dotty Miller, Michelle Demaio, Lucienne DeMeo, Rich Muschek, Keith Peacock, Darrell McMurray, Lora Kendrick, Holly Six and Carol Hohbach.

It's a nice memory of the fourth grade and a good way to share the love of reading, Riordan said. "You can have a good time all night just reading and being together."
