Packing up

CILHI pulling out, may return at later date

After more than two months of back-breaking, sweaty, persistent work, the team from the Central Identification Laboratory in Hawaii is packing up and leaving. But not with the Makin Raiders.

"We don't come up empty in our worldwide [recovery missions] very often. It was disappointing," said Dr. Greg Fox, CILHI archaeologist, who will spend the next several days writing reports before leaving Kwaj as early as Tuesday.

Six team members departed Thursday, while Dr. Carl Kuttruff, an independent archaeologist serving as site monitor for the excavation, left Wednesday. The remainder of the team should fly out by next week, assuming they can elbow room on the planes with the expected exodus of TDY personnel following tomorrow's IFT-8.

"It was hard work," said Capt. Pat Reynolds, USMC, the team leader for the last two weeks. Added Sgt. 1st Class Sean Bendele, team sergeant, "We wish we could have found them."

Unfortunately, those wishes were packed.

The mission went off without a hitch. Even the six protesters who snuck onto Meck Island were apprehended.

This is not a prediction. The mission, Wednesday, was a dress rehearsal of Saturday's IFT-8 with everything including pretend protesters.

"It was good to get the opportunity to practice," said Capt. Richard Scrivner, operations officer who accompanied the OPFOR team, or pretend protesters, that stormed the beaches of Meck. The team drove up to Meck on B-boats before letting off the six protesters on the beach. The protesters then ran across the island with a banner in hand, trying to evade the security

TEACHING by EXAMPLE Student instructors learn tips from Kwajalein schools

By KW Hillis

The class arrived on Kwajalein Tuesday and by the next day they already had acquired some new teaching techniques, which they will eagerly take back to schools on Majuro, Jaluit, Likiep, Majetto and Ebeye.

For the second year in a row, student teachers from the College of the Marshall Islands toured Kwajalein schools, courtesy of the Yokwe Yuk Women's Club. Two supervisors and seven students from Majuro and one student from Gugegue observed teaching and discipline techniques in the classroom.

"This is part of the Yokwe Yuk Women's Club Educational Assistance Committee's focus of helping with education in the Marshall Islands," said Cris Lindborg, YYWC committee member. "It was so successful last year ... we're hoping that this will be a yearly thing."

This year the committee tried to get education majors attending CMI on Gugegue, but because they are teaching full time, only one could attend, Lindborg said.

"They will be able to visit on week-

What does a mere 2 percent of poor quality cost us? Too much

At some point we all become the customer. I've said that many times. A couple of weeks ago, I became the customer.

Thirty-three percent of the people responding to a recent survey said KLS, or Kwajalein Logistical Support, had to be called back out a second time to correctly perform a repair to their quarters or workplace — that they didn't do it right the first time. If you consider that this involves paying for the same thing twice and creating unhappy customers, it's a big problem.

My personal experience involved new electrical lines to my house, which were installed backwards. This ultimately resulted in a fried television and two smokin' stereo components ... which necessitates filing a claim and trying to find the same brand of components ... You get it.

The electrician told me that this only happened in three of the 60 houses rewired on the island. That's one in 20. That's a 95 percent success rate, which sounds good at first glance. But, consider this actual case.

The Defense Finance and Accounting System disburses the Department of Defense budget of approximately $360 billion (plus) a year, or about $1 billion a day. Even with a 98 percent success rate DoD-wide, that other two percent of poor quality costs the U.S. taxpayer about $20 million a day. Twenty million dollars a day! Think about how much money that is and think about what we could buy, build, repair or replace with that kind of money. To me — as a taxpaying citizen and as a military steward of the taxpayers' money — that's a chunk of change.

USAKA and Raytheon can promote quality assurance concepts and programs like APIC and Six Sigma until the cows come home, but it has to be meaningful to the workforce ... sort of the old WIIFM (what's in it for me?). I was impressed to learn from the electrician who worked on my house that he is fully aware of his company's quality program and felt 95 percent was good. That tells me the workforce here appreciates and takes responsibility for the fact that they are the point of execution. And that, ladies and gentlemen, is the crucial element ... buy-in at the execution level.

And, if the workforce is aware of that, then management is doing their job ... inculcating a quality program into their teams and shops. But, it's also management's responsibility to show their workforce what five percent or two percent does cost — whether it's keeping a customer waiting five minutes, a wrong stock number, five percent of stock being the wrong stock or five percent of stock completely disappearing.

I understand that we do not operate in a perfect environment given our location, state of facilities and equipment, not to mention personnel concerns such as turnover, motivation, cultural, etc. But, our goal must be perfection! We can't afford to conduct multi-million dollar tests and not capture key and essential data. This goal of perfect execution must permeate every facet of our operation.

In future articles, we will attempt to bring to light specific ways we have or have not implemented our quality programs to achieve desired objectives.

Ask yourself, "What is my quality program and training? What is my supervisor doing to guarantee quality, and what am I doing to assure quality at my level (where the rubber meets the road!)? Finally, what does that two percent really cost?"

Are you with me? Hooah!

Bean there yet? Bakery opens new coffee kiosk

By Peter Rejcek

Connie Southwell is "at least" a two-cup coffee drinker in the mornings. The opening of the Sunrise Bakery's new coffee kiosk featuring gourmet bean drinks is a welcome addition to the island's beverage choices.

"I was so excited. I had no idea it would be so nice," said Southwell, who designed the decorations for the bakery's new look.

Featuring Chicago's The Gourmet Bean coffee and products, the bakery held a soft opening Tuesday afternoon for training purposes and had a grand re-opening Wednesday morning. The menu includes espressos, iced flavored coffees, lattes, cappuccinos and specialty coffees such as butter pecan.

Those who like their cup of joe without frills should be glad to know the house brew is kona — and at the same price.

"It's a better quality coffee," said Jewels Marhold, Sodexho USA marketing/catering director.

Both caffeinated and decaf house brew will be available daily, along with at least one specialty coffee, according to Jane Abston, bakery manager, who attended stateside schools — including one in coffee mecca, Seattle — to learn more about beans and the business.

"I learned a lot about what makes a good bean," Abston said.

Volene Davis orders a vanilla latte from Jewels Marhold, Sodexho USA marketing/catering director, Tuesday afternoon at the Sunrise Bakery during a soft opening previewing the new coffee kiosk featuring a diverse menu of bean-flavored drinks.

The new configuration at the bakery should also help speed service along, Abston said. The bakery averages 400 customers before 9 a.m., Marhold noted.

Plutonium landfill planned at Johnston Isle

By Peter Rejcek
Associate Editor

The U.S. Defense Threat Reduction Agency is soliciting public input on a proposal to put radioactive materials dating back from the 1960s into a capped landfill at Johnston Atoll.

The public comment period is through April 19. One-hour public availability sessions followed by public meetings will be held on Kauai, Maui, Hawaii and Oahu through March 20. Comment can be made through DTRA's Web site at www.dtra.mil.

The DTRA is a Department of Defense agency whose mission is to reduce the physical and psychological threats of weapons of mass destruction. It is responsible for remediating radioactive material on Johnston Atoll from aborted missile launches during the high-altitude nuclear weapons testing program there in 1962.

Contaminated materials include coral soil, metals and concrete debris, which are located in four piles in the island's Radiological Control Area.

One of the piles of coral — 45,000 cubic meters — registers nearly 15 times the level of radiation acceptable as a cleanup standard by the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency, according to the DTRA's fact sheet. Plutonium oxide and americium, a decay product of plutonium, are the contaminants of concern.

After considering a number of options of what to do with the material, the agency has proposed to put all the items into a landfill in the Radiological Control Area. It will be constructed with the metal and concrete debris forming the bottom layer, followed by a layer composed of the coral soil above EPA standards, and capped with a minimum of two feet of coral soil below EPA standards, according to DTRA.

"The proposed option is fiscally sound and protective of human health and the environment. This document is intended to comply with the National Environmental Policy Act ... of 1969," according to DTRA's executive summary for the proposal on its Web site.

After completing the landfill, the DTRA will monitor the site for construction defects for five years, or "until routine, scheduled, normal airline service" to Johnston Atoll is terminated, whichever is first. Any faults are expected to occur within the first five years, the agency said.

Mission fails to recover Marines, but book not closed ...

away with wheelbarrows, shovels and blue buckets as remaining team members boxed up the group's equipment for shipment back to Hickam Air Force Base, Hawaii, where the lab is located.

All of the evidence had indicated the nine Makin Raiders — Marines executed here in 1942 following a raid in the Gilbert Islands to the south — were buried somewhere in the vicinity of the Japanese Cemetery. Research by CILHI historians and others indicated at least three B-24 crews were also executed and buried on Kwaj.

But even after replotting the maps and doubling the original excavation area after the first month of digging, the team found only a few scattered remains, ordnance, frag, utility lines and several minor artifacts such as a Japanese bayonet.

"We worked under the assumption they were in a particular building. That may be incorrect," Fox explained.

The building Fox is talking about is the cell the Marines were likely held in before their execution. The best educated guess places their island prison just in front of today's RTS Photo Lab. But after extensive excavation north and west of that area — including the street intersection — that hypothesis didn't yield results.

"Once you dig up the ground, there's not much else you can do," Fox said. The possibility that the grave may have been destroyed by the February 1944 invasion by American forces is a consideration, Fox said, but inconclusive. The southern section of the excavation was fairly undisturbed, but a number of craters and bunkers were found in the north and east sections of the site.

"It's difficult to assess," Fox said of whether or not the grave may have been disturbed by the heavy bombardment 58 years ago.

While this mission was unsuccessful, the search for the Makin Raiders is not over, according to the CILHI archaeologist. The remains that were found will be taken to the CILHI lab for examination, including DNA analysis, which could take several months. The CILHI historians will be asked to take another look at the evidence on hand, and might even search out additional witnesses in Japan, Fox said.

At this point, Fox said he still believes the team is in the right vicinity of the grave. "Our Marshallese witnesses said, 'You're in the right area,'" he said, adding that they were not able to provide more specific details.

The question of if the team is able to return falls on whether new information can be found through additional archival research, new witnesses or if DNA analysis of the fragments determines the bones are those of Americans. When a team might return is dependent on CILHI's priority schedule and worldwide events, according to Fox.

He said there is still a lot of interest in this recovery mission.

"We spent considerable resources on it, and nobody likes to quit, myself included," he added. "My organization is very persistent."

Fox said the mission was particularly pleasant because the team wasn't operating in hostile territory, as it sometimes does. "We couldn't have accomplished our mission without our local volunteers."

EOC, Marines, police sweep atoll for IFT-8 mission ...

forces set upon catching them.

"The security forces performed in an excellent manner," Scrivner said.

"We try to interject a scenario that is as real as what we might encounter on mission day," said Lt. Col. Steve Morris, USAKA director of Plans, Training and Security.

Meanwhile, technicians took cover on Meck, practicing the various routines modified over the past seven integrated flight tests that are designed to ensure a successful intercept.

"The other rehearsals going on around the range have been very good about integrating security into the operation," Scrivner added.

Police and Marines began the painstaking process of the reef sweeps Thursday. Traveling aboard SAR 1, the troops physically comb the Mid-Atoll Corridor islands for people hiding out, or just "the guy in the fish camp" who is unaware of the upcoming operation and may want to take cover on another island outside the corridor.

Teams must also search Bigej and the other islands adjacent to Meck right up to mission time.

At the same time, a fleet of boats, including USAKA's Great Bridge and the RMI ship Lomor, patrol the waters around the atoll.

After seven previous missions, Morris and Scrivner said the job is still tough and hardly routine.

"I wouldn't say it was a routine, but we're getting better at it," Scrivner said. "Repetition is the mother of all skills."

The Emergency Operations Center, which opened for business Tuesday, goes to 24-hour staffing today through the mission. During IFT-7 that was a 72-hour marathon relay as weather delayed the mission on three successive 24-hour slips, sparking the "Groundhog Day effect," a reference to the movie in which Bill Murray relives the same day, day after day.

"It gets to be pretty taxing," Morris said. "You have to re-execute all of the operations 24 hours before the mission."

Weather at Vandenburg should be partly cloudy with winds at 17 to 22 mph, gusting to 30 mph, said Jeff Mullins, IFT-8 mission meteorologist. Temperatures there are in the 50s, too. All the numbers are within operational norms.

Mullins will watch rain showers to the south of Kwajalein that could slip into the area Saturday afternoon. If not, however, the atoll will see partly cloudy skies with isolated to widely scattered showers, he said. Either way, the weather should cooperate for the most part, though the heavier showers and clouds could obstruct the view for Optics.

Said Morris, "RTS is looking good and getting ready to deliver a successful mission to our customer."

March Fun Run set for Monday afternoon

Kwajalein Running Club's March Fun Run is Monday at 5:30 p.m. Meet outside the bowling alley (Bldg. 805) and choose your distance: 1/2-mile for the little ones and either two or five miles for everyone else. KSC members and non-members welcome.

Student teachers face crowded classrooms ...

ends, though," she said. "Most of these people have never been to an American school system. It's a real eye opener."

Special education teacher and CMI Student-Teacher visit coordinator Debbie Mawhar presented a packed schedule including classroom observation times, a book fair visit, a childhood workshop at the Child Development Center and a tour of the Marshallese Cultural Center.

"Now I have something to teach with," said Nenar Loska, spreading out the handouts given to her by special education teacher Jayne Mack and Scarlett Scholte, a YYWC member who teaches on Ebeye. Originally from Majetto, an island at the northwest corner of Kwajalein Atoll, where she taught special education classes, Loska will finish her degree this spring. She said that she will return to Majetto to teach math and English to special ed students.

Although all but one student teacher taught before they started school themselves, the RMI requires that they get a teaching degree, said Netila Yoshikawa, another special education student teacher. Bachelor's degrees are also required, but currently the students can either go to Guam or Hawaii or take summer courses. Yoshikawa said she would take summer courses, but that it would take a long time to get her bachelor's degree.

The RMI provides scholarships so their residents can get their associate and their bachelor's degrees, said Jesse Napolitano, the one student who did not teach before attending CMI.

By the fall of 2003, CMI wants to offer a four-year education program using the Northern Marianas College curriculum and accreditation, said Lucy Castano, CMI education program teacher and supervisor.

Once assigned to a school after graduation, some of the teachers will teach more than one grade at a time. Rien Jauwe said he will return to Likiep, where he will resume teaching first through fourth grade in the same classroom at the same time.

After his first morning of observation in Madelain Westermann's third-grade class, Jauwe said he learned some techniques to work with individual children and on classroom discipline.

"She showed how to transition from one subject to another," he said.

All of the student teachers are faced with large classes and small classrooms.

"I have 36 students and very little room," said Junior James, adding that he's doing his practicum class at the same school that he taught at before going to CMI and that he will return to Laura Public Elementary to teach after he receives his degree.

The educational exchange worked both ways, with James sharing Marshallese legends and a picture of his students with Michelle DeMello's fifth-graders, who were surprised that all the elementary students on Majuro wear uniforms, he said.

After another half day of observing classes at the elementary and high school Wednesday, the visitors attended the PTO Book Fair that evening.

"I'm surprised that so many in the community are at the book fair," Napolitano said, explaining that when he was attending school in America, only the children came to the book fair. Originally from Kentucky, Napolitano attended high school in Majuro when his mother worked for the Ministry of Health. After a stint in the U.S. Army, he returned to attend CMI and plans to teach there. Napolitano had spent the day observing classes and paid a visit to the library.

"I was very impressed, especially with the library," he said. "They expose the children to many different varieties of literature — everything from fairy tales to history ... it will do a lot to develop their interest in reading."

There is no library in Uliga Elementary School, where Napolitano is a student teacher.

"That is the norm for any public elementary school in Majuro," he said. "It is hard to expect someone to develop reading skills when they don't have any access to books."

He said that he hopes to change that when he becomes a teacher in Majuro by starting a library in his assigned school.

The other visitors were eager to bring back what they had learned.

"I can't wait to get back to tell them what I learned — to show them what I learned," Yoshikawa said, holding a small stack of books from the PTO Book Fair to use with her classes on Majuro.

The PTO had given each student teacher $10 in gift certificates that could be redeemed at the book fair, and all the visitors were taking full advantage of the coupons, Mawhar said.

The group left this afternoon, hoping to use what they learned here to change the future.

"They are full of ideas to take back with them," Castano said.

Foul Play, Boogie Bubbles start season with wins

By Jim Bennett
Editor

Inner Tube Water Polo kicked off with a splash Tuesday with two matches — Foul Play downing Marco 24-14 and Boogie Bubbles drowning the Lifeguards 46-22.

Marco hung tight in the first half, scoring eight points and holding Foul Play to 12. Brian Brewster led Marco with eight points on the night. But Foul Play widened the gap in the second half, largely on the play of their two-pronged attack in Ian West and Jeremy Gideon, who combined for 12 points, seven for West and five for Gideon.

In the second match, veterans Boogie Bubbles crushed the young team Lifeguards in the first half, 26-2. Lifeguards got their offense started in the second half, led by Ben Ladd, who scored eight during the match. Les Wynne led the BB scoring attack with eight points, followed by Kai Kalahiki with six points.

"I look for [Lifeguards] to do well next week," said Kristin Haney, Pools and Beaches coordinator. "They just needed to figure out who to play where. They came back in the second half, and if they'd played like that in the first half, you'd have had a close game."

But this is just the beginning of a five-week season that promises to capture all of the splashes and ball-slamming for which the Kwaj sport is known.

Games are set for Tuesdays and Thursdays at 6 p.m. and 7 p.m. at Millican Family Pool, though no games were played last night.

Five teams, including new blood and veterans alike, dot the schedule. They are:

Marco — a new team made up of primarily teachers. Kids come out and root for your favorite instructor.

Foul Play — This team went 7-3 last season, claiming third place behind Chargogg and Undertow, but they want more than the bronze medal this season.

Boogie Bubbles — "A rose by any other name" this annual team, despite the name changes, holds the most experience in the sport. They're like the Arizona Diamondbacks of water polo, and historically, they've kept up with the younger crowd. Look for them to do the same this year.

Lifeguards — a new, young team, made up of, you guessed it, lifeguards. They should be comfortable in the water, at least, and if they can get their game together as they did the second half of Tuesday's game, should be tough.

Chargogg... — The returning runner-ups are named for the river in Massachusetts with the very long name. Their depth chart is just as long. If only the championship trophy had a wider base.

D division headed to the Series, other leagues still in play

By Peter Rejcek
Associate Editor

Mary Harris-Wiehe could be the most conflicted coach in World Series history Saturday night when the Calvary Boys put their perfect record on the line for the first game against Katoore for the D division crown.

Harris-Wiehe works with both teams and says she'll be sitting in the middle, "rooting for all the good plays.

"Both teams are excited," she added. "Especially Calvary; they're representing their school."

Calvary is 10-0 after beating the other five teams in its division twice. Katoore, made up of various Marshallese employees, brings a respectable 7-3 record to the World Series.

Harris-Wiehe is actually involved with a total of five Marshallese teams. Besides the two D division rivals, she works with the Calvary Girls, Brothers All and Sunrise, an A league team.

"[I'm involved with] as many Marshallese teams as they'll let me," she said.

Her Sunrise team sits in third place with a 2-6-1 record in the A division, which is finished with regular season play. At the top of the division is Podunkers with a near-perfect record of 8-0-1, followed by Criminals (6-3). Guppies is struggling at 1-8.

The A league World Series begins March 26, preceded by a week of exhibition games against some strong B division competition.

The picture in the B division is still not too clear, as those teams are in the middle of regular play after a split with a 12-team C division earlier in the season.

As of Friday morning, Spartans I boasted the best record at 3-1, with the Barnacles and Brothers All still in the hunt for the No. 1 spot with identical 2-1 records. Close behind is Gummos (2-2), while Meck (0-2) and MK Brothers (0-2) struggle. (Most records are through Thursday morning.)

HB Monnin appears to be well in control in the C division, going 3-0 in the second half of their season, while the rookie team San Juan is making a statement with a 2-0 record. The rest of the division — Angel Town (1-1), Da Bomb (0-3), G-4 (1-1) and Spartans II (0-3) — is still trying to put a winning record together.

In the two women's divisions, the leaders are both undefeated.

Thirty-Something is the team to beat in the A division, posting an 8-0 record. Homeplate is securely in second place with a 4-3 record. Jab Elik Lik (2-6) and Spartans I Ladies (1-6) round out the division.

Scrubs is another undefeated team, 6-0, and appear tough to beat, with their closest competition, Queen of Peace, at 4-3. The Calvary Ladies (2-5) are third while the Spartans II Ladies are still trying to find their swing at 1-5.

Children and adults swirled around the George Seitz Elementary School music room, peering at books and colorful stuffed animals neatly displayed on tables and in cardboard cases on the floor at this week's book fair sponsored by the Parent Teacher Organization.

"It was quite a crowd," said Janice Riordan, PTO member and fourth-grade teacher.

The elementary school classes visited the book fair during classes on Tuesday and Wednesday before it was open to the community, said Meredith Schubach, PTO member.

English teacher Diane Horsburgh's eighth- and ninth-grade classes visited the fair during the school day, and some students came back Wednesday night. "I told them that they could earn extra credit by coming to the book fair," Horsburgh said.

PTO book fairs, held spring and fall, are more than just fundraisers, Riordan said.

"[They] make books more accessible," she said.

The fair generated sales of $7,500. Thirty percent is used for things like spelling bee and science fair prizes and to help fund the artist-in-residence program, Riordan said.
