Medical society monitors pulse of local communities

By KW Hillis
Feature Writer

For almost eight years the Marshall Islands Medical Society, little known except in medical circles, has flourished on Kwajalein and Ebeye. Last weekend, about 20 Kwaj members visited Ebeye and toured the new Leiroj Kitlang Memorial Health Center.

"[I] like the spacious nature, the operating rooms are wonderful," said Dr. John Janikowski, MIMS president and Kwajalein Hospital doctor. "They have two operating rooms, where we have one. They have a dedicated delivery room, where we use our delivery room for multiple purposes."

An on-premises kitchen to supply patients' meals and a huge conference room also got high marks from Janikowski, who said he had seen the shell of the hospital in 1997, but could not tour the health center during the dedication ceremony as planned since he was called back to Kwajalein for an emergency.

Ebeye's health professionals, including Dr. Tim Soe, MIMS vice president and Ebeye Hospital doctor, gave the tour. It represents a part of the ongoing collaboration between the two hospital staffs, said Bess Buchanan, First Stop physician's assistant.

"Since we get patients from Ebeye and then send them back there, it's good to know what the facilities are," she said.

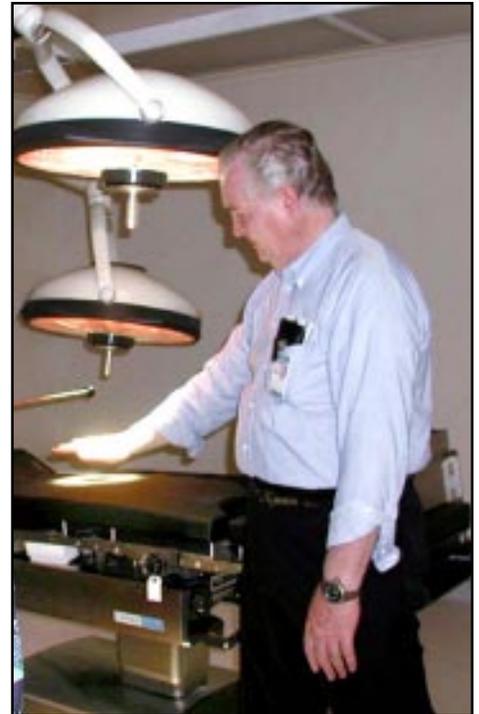

Others in the MIMS group appreciated the chance to see behind the scenes.

"The technical laboratory looks like it has more capability [than the old Ebeye Hospital]," said Sandra Clark, Kwajalein Hospital Laboratory supervisor, who joined MIMS for its continuing education component.

Founded by Kwajalein Hospital chief medical officer Dr. Eric Lindborg and Ebeye Hospital chief of staff Dr. Alan Talens, the society allows health care professionals to get together for "camaraderie and educational purposes," Janikowski said.

"The society was put together for education as well as to enhance communication and mutual understanding of the medical challenges of providing medical care at a remote site," he said. "There are things [Ebeye Hospital] can do that we can't do and vice versa. It provides a more personal face to our interactions as professionals," he

DSC snack bar to reopen

By Jim Bennett

The verdict is in, and the Dock Security Checkpoint snack bar will reopen April 2 after a trial closing Jan. 1. The snack bar will serve patrons Tuesdays through Saturdays, 6:30 a.m. to 5 p.m.

"I'm glad they're going to reopen," said Christensen Robert, an Ebeye commuter who works at Shipping and Receiving, across the street from the DSC snack bar. "It's very convenient for us and the food is good."

RSE and Sodexho officials closed the facility on a trial basis to determine the demand for the service and reevaluate the operation. After nearly three months, officials have received a lot of feedback from customers.

"We listened to what they had to say," said Lloyd Jordan, RSE Residential Services manager. "And they said they wanted the snack bar open."

The DSC snack bar averaged 400-500 customers daily, mostly Marshallese commuters from Ebeye along with a number of those going to and from the airport, either traveling or seeing off family and friends, said

El Niño or nada?

Signs indicate weather pattern could return during 2002-03

By Peter Rejcek

It's back.

Well, there are indications that everyone's favorite weather phenomenon, El Niño, is going to make an appearance in 2002-2003, according to the National Oceanic Atmospheric Administration.

NOAA reported earlier this month that ocean surface temperatures warmed about four degrees Fahrenheit near the South American coast in February. The temperature change was accompanied by an increase in rainfall over that region, the agency said.

"This warming is an additional sign the Pacific Ocean is heading toward an El Niño condition," said Conrad Lautenbacher, NOAA administrator and Under Secretary of Commerce for Oceans and Atmosphere. He said it is too early to determine how strong the phenomenon will be or what weather conditions it will bring, but it will likely hang around into 2003.

Locally, based on what happened during the last El Niño in 1997-1998, Aeromet meteorologist Jeff Mullins

Taking control of one's inner peace can be quite a war

"I let someone take my silence," my friend said to me. "They didn't steal it. I gave it away."

I waited. It was one of those rare occasions when I kept my mouth shut.

She said she denied the fact that she missed silence for too long.

"Years," she said. "I compromised my silence and my inner peace."

I listened.

"You see, without silence in my heart and soul... and life, I didn't have to feel. I could just react.

"Oh, it's much easier that way," she told me. "It's much easier to give so much of yourself away that you start to become a victim." But, she said, people can change their circumstances. They don't have to stay victims.

"That's so boring," she said. "I don't like to be around professional victims, you know, and I wasn't going to become one. We can take one step today toward changing the situation, so we're not still moaning about it tomorrow, right?"

This was getting heavy, but I hung in there... and I still didn't say anything. I just did that active listening body language thing. You know, nodding, arching a curious eyebrow, things like that. It worked. My friend kept talking.

"It was much easier to blame every loss, every hurt on another person. Oh yeah..." she hesitated, "much easier than being responsible for myself and my own inner peace." I pushed a little pink box of chocolates across the table toward her. She shook her head no, and continued.

"But one day, that silence insisted I let it back in," she said, as she reached for the box of chocolates. "Insisted I fight for it. Insisted I not ignore it any longer."

She bit into the Godiva chocolate, closed her eyes and chewed forever. My watch beeped the hour. The cat jumped off the couch and stalked a little gecko. "...just what you want to be, you will be in the end..." played on the radio.

I watched... remembering why I have two eyes and two ears, and only one mouth.

"I quietly stepped off the roller-coaster," she said. "That was the day I walked away from the din and took control of my happiness again."

I arched my eyebrow.

"And guess what?" she asked me.

I arched the same eyebrow. For some reason I can't arch the other one.

"When I did that... I took my sweet, loving, nurturing and peaceful friend — inner peace — back into my life. I'll never let anyone have it again. I'll keep and cherish it always," she said, "and I will feel!"

The little gecko lost the battle.

"Write this down," she said. "It's important. It's one of those lessons you wish you never had to learn."

The cat stretched and rolled over, belly-up. I wrote.

Don't park common sense when you stop biking

I love living in a community where the main mode of transportation is a bicycle. However, it will never cease to amaze me where people park their bikes.

I find myself weaving my way through a maze of bikes that are parked in front of the entrance to Ten Ten, Macy's, Tape Escape, and particularly, the Post Office. I can understand if someone has a heavy package to mail or pick up, but there is no excuse to park right in front of the Post Office steps.

I don't think we need to put up "no parking" signs where it should be obvious there is no parking. I just think we need a little common sense.

Staffing comes together at Kwajalein schools

By Barbara Johnson
Feature Writer

The Kwajalein School District found candidates to fill its staffing needs for next year at the Iowa recruitment fair, said Karen Ammann, school superintendent, at Wednesday night's School Advisory Council meeting. Ammann just returned from her yearly trip to the University of Northern Iowa fair.

Although it's the biggest teaching recruitment fair in the U.S., the candidate pool was considerably smaller this year, probably due to world events, Ammann said.

"The lines were still long for Kwajalein," she said, and the orientation had standing room only.

The district was looking for three teachers, she said. Two CDC teachers have been hired, and one junior/senior high school teacher has just been offered a job, Ammann said.

"We will be fully staffed by the end of the year," she said, adding that there is also a candidate pool of interested teachers in case of resignations this summer.

"We're looking for people who are multi-certified [at the junior/senior high school level]," she said. "We can no longer hire someone who just teaches one subject."

Fifth-grade teacher

Ammann announced that the fifth-grade teaching position to be vacated by Michelle Wilson this week will be filled by Janet Corbin for the remainder of the year. Corbin has previously substituted for the district.

In response to a request at an earlier SAC meeting, Ammann placed an ad through Human Resources in the Hourglass for the vacant position, but received no applications, she said.

In reference to another suggestion made that a sixth-grade teacher be moved to the position, Ammann said, she discussed the issue with staff, Human Resources and the SAC and gave the subject a lot of thought. That would mean significant changes for students in both grades, she said.

This is "the most educationally sound decision for the most students," Ammann said. The lesson plans will be reviewed and the teaching monitored through the quarter, she said.

"I'm confident that she'll do a good job for us," Ammann said.

Immunization policy adopted

Also at Wednesday's meeting, the new school district immunization policy was proposed for the second time, as required, and then adopted by the SAC.

The major changes are that the policy now includes all students, including preschool. Students are required to have proof of immunization on the first day of school, and a physical exam is required for anyone entering kindergarten and all new students.

Ammann said that Dr. Eric Lindborg, Kwajalein Hospital chief medical officer, put together the policy changes last fall to bring them in line with stateside standards and U.S. Centers for Disease Control recommendations. High school curriculum

Final drafts for the proposed high school math, consumer science and reading curricula have been reviewed by faculty and volunteer parents and were discussed at an open meeting Tuesday night, said Steve Howell, junior/senior high school principal.

Because there were several comments on the reading and math curricula, both at the meeting and by parents who dropped them by the school office, those committees will meet again to consider the comments, he said.

"There were good ideas expressed, and we should consider those," Howell said after the SAC meeting. "The meeting was very positive. The parents and community members are to be thanked for their efforts," he added.

Assuming there are no major revisions, the proposed final drafts will be presented at the April SAC meeting.

At the elementary school spelling bee March 18, the winners for fourth grade were Emily Lemmond, first; Daniel Six, second, and Rose DeMaio, third. Fifth grade winners were Alan Rowe, first; Alex DeMeo, second, and Chi Chi Kemem, third. For the sixth grade, Josh Koehler, first; Christen Schwarz, second; and Julie Vining, third.

Some meal card holders need new badges for electronic system

By Peter Rejcek

The dining halls at Kwajalein and Roi-Namur will soon enter the electronic age.

IT expects to have a new electronic system on line by the end of the month, according to Tony Gibson, of IT-Information Assurance. Instead of meal cards, patrons will use their K-badges at both dining halls.

"We would expect about a two-week phase-in period," Gibson said.

He said the hardware has already been installed. "We are just in the final stages of getting ready to roll it out."

Farida Straub, Sodexho USA director of operations, explained the system is mainly intended to better account for usage. It is used worldwide by Sodexho, she said, adding that down the road the system can be expanded for use at all dining facilities, a plan the command first put forth last year. The idea is to give card holders credit that can be spent at any food establishment.

For now, the system will just keep track of three meals a day. If someone tries to exceed that number, the system will alert the cashier, Straub said.

The switch to the electronic system will be painless for most. However, meal card holders with 40,000-series K-badges will need to get their badges replaced. The number is found on the back of the K-badge in small black numbers at the bottom left corner.

Lt. Travis Coldwell, of Kwajalein Police Administration, said the badges that begin with the number four are not compatible with the system and about 160 were distributed before the error was caught.

Those with the defective cards can replace their K-badges at the Entry/Exit office in Building 901 on the following dates and times:

- March 27, 10 a.m.-1 p.m.
- March 28, 1-4 p.m.
- March 29, 8 a.m.-1 p.m.
- March 30, 8 a.m.-1 p.m.

Residents need to bring their old cards before they can receive new ones, Coldwell said. Roi-Namur residents can exchange their old K-badges for new ones at the KPD office in Building 8035 on March 30, from 1 to 5 p.m.

Those K-badge holders with a 40,000-series card who do not have meal cards (i.e., accompanied employees) are not required to replace them at this time, Coldwell said. Those badges will be phased out as people PCS, he said.

Editor's Note: We asked our local ministers to speak on what Holy Week means to them, and the following is what came back to us. We don't mean to endorse one religion over another, these are just our ministers' thoughts, but we certainly can't ignore religion, either, as it represents a part of life on Kwajalein. Hopefully, in the future, we can better cover this aspect of our community, for all religions.

Easter is not an academic question, but a personal answer

By the Rev. John Dorr

"Palm Sunday," "Holy Week," "Maundy Thursday," "Good Friday," "Easter." These are familiar words to some, unusual words to many. Even within the Christian community, the understanding and observance of these holidays varies widely. Yet, behind them all are historical events that still impact our lives today.

The first Palm Sunday began in Jerusalem during the preparation for the Jewish feast of Passover. The streets were crowded with worshipers who had come to the city to celebrate the feast. Jesus of Nazareth entered the city riding on a donkey. He was hailed as a King and a Liberator. He had a reputation for miracles and simple teaching. The people thought He would rid their land of the Roman occupation and reestablish the throne of David.

Jesus, however, began to teach in the Temple and in homes. He taught about forgiveness and reconciliation not revolution. As the week progressed, many that had hailed Him as their king turned away from Him, others even turned against Him.

Rev. John Dorr

When it came time for the Passover, Jesus celebrated the meal with His closest disciples. To demonstrate the servant nature of His ministry, He washed their feet. He told them that God was establishing a "New Covenant" with them. He said that His life would be sacrificed to enable this New Covenant. He was then arrested, tried, tortured, and finally executed. His body was placed in a borrowed tomb.

As the new week began, three days after He had died, women who had followed Him came to His tomb to place spices and perfume on His body. He was gone. He had risen! They saw Him. So did many others. Reports spread of His resurrection. Millions continue to speak of His resurrection today.

The impact of the Easter message on world history is an academic discussion. The important question is: Has the Easter message had an impact on you? Without the message of Easter and the good news of Jesus' resurrection, hope is an unreachable commodity. Death is finally victorious. Nothing really changes. But, what if those women on the way to that tomb were right? What if the millions of men, women and children who have been martyred over the centuries were right? What if it is all true? How will it change your life if He is really alive?

I pray that the message of life and hope that only Easter can bring will touch your heart this year and that His life will make a difference in yours. God bless you.

Easter holiday speaks to deep emotions

By Father William Sullivan

Each year during Holy Week Catholics all over the world celebrate the central belief of their religion — that Jesus Christ, who suffered and died on the first Good Friday, was raised from the dead on the first Easter Sunday morning.

On the cross on Good Friday Jesus broke the power of sin and of Satan's bottomless hatred for the human race. But Satan was not bested by the power of God; nothing would have given Satan greater pleasure than to claim that he, a creature, could only be defeated by the power of an infinite God. Rather Satan's pride was irrevocably mocked on Good Friday by the humility of God, who suffered crucifixion, one of the most degrading and tormenting deaths imaginable.

So pleased was God with Jesus' saving death on the cross that He raised Him from the dead on the first Easter Sunday morning. And when Jesus' body came back to life, it was completely and totally transformed: no longer could it suffer any physical pain whatsoever and, more important, it could never die again.

Fr. William Sullivan

Like many other Christians Catholics believe that they too will share in the resurrection of Christ at the end of time. What happened to Jesus' body on the first Easter Sunday morning will happen to theirs; and that in some mysterious way the entire physical universe will also survive the end of history: all matter will be transformed, not just our risen human bodies.

From this perspective Good Friday and Easter Sunday continually respond to some of our deepest human longings: the power of love over hatred; of light over the darkness of distorted thinking and paralyzing fears; of healing over decay and eventual nothingness; of life over death.

El Niño could mean drought conditions for Kwaj ...

said to expect drought conditions, depending on the strength of the phenomenon. Also, winds generally shift from a northeasterly direction to the west, meaning different conditions for boating and other recreational activities.

"Looking at our rainfall data for past 30 plus years, rainfall at Kwajalein for the year of the El Niño onset was usually 15 to 30 percent above normal — not sure if this is a positive correlation or just happenstance — followed by one to two years of 20 to 30 percent below normal," Mullins said.

For example, during the 1982-1983 El Niño years, which were particularly strong, Kwaj received its normal rainfall, about 101 inches, in 1982. But the next two years, Aeromet records show a significant drop — 80 inches in 1983 and just 60 inches in 1984. During a relatively weak El Niño in 1993-1994, rainfall was unaffected.

"The bottom line is Kwajalein normally experiences drier than normal conditions after El Niño is realized, depending on the strength of El Niño that year," Mullins explained. "So if El Niño does begin later this winter, then Kwajalein could expect a drier than normal year in 2003."

Despite recent hype by media forecasts of an El Niño event, Mullins said the latest weather reports show a slight weakening of factors that indicate an El Niño.

Back in the states, NOAA said the growing phenomenon, should it be El Niño, could cause:

- drier-than-normal monsoon season conditions in the Southwest;
- drier-than-normal fall and winter in the Pacific Northwest;
- wetter-than-normal winter in the Gulf Coast states from Louisiana to Florida;
- warmer-than-normal late fall and winter in the northern Great Plains and the upper Midwest;
- suppressed total number of tropical systems in the Atlantic hurricane season;
- and an increase in the number of East Coast winter storms.

El Niño conditions occur once water temperatures have warmed sufficiently enough to alter the normal patterns of cloudiness and rainfall in the tropical Pacific basin. A typical El Niño features persistent, increased precipitation along the equator near the international dateline and warmer-than-normal sea-surface temperatures extending eastward to the South American coast.

El Niño episodes occur roughly every four or five years and can last up to 18 months, according to NOAA. The last disturbance occurred in 1997-1998, and was followed by three years of La Niña, which has the opposite effect of El Niño, causing unusually cold ocean temperatures in the equatorial Pacific.

One of the key instruments NOAA uses to monitor and detect El Niño is the Tropical Atmospheric-Ocean/Triangle Trans Ocean Buoy Network, or TAO/TRITON Buoy Array, consisting of about 70 moored buoys spanning the equatorial Pacific Ocean. Polar-orbiting satellites are also employed for forecasting purposes. Both provide atmospheric and oceanographic data in real-time, according to NOAA.

Mullins said he recently plotted one of those TAO/TRITON buoys, and it's located 8 degrees north, 165 degrees east. "It's close," he said.

Medical group sponsors speakers, projects ...

Members said the society sponsored lectures by a visiting endocrinologist in December, the Rev. Francis X. Hezel's talk on suicide in the Marshall Islands and a lecture by Dr. Robert Overlock on hyperbaric, or dive, medicine. The Ebeye medical community sponsored a seminar on Marshallese medicine for the society too.

The society also promotes a project on an annual basis, Janikowski said. In the past, society members have helped provide equipment and uniforms for Ebeye nursing students.

"We haven't put together our latest project," he said, "[It will be] doing something for the new hospital."

MIMS is looking for new members from both islands, and the membership is not limited to health care professionals currently working at the hospital or dental clinic, Janikowski said.

"Any health care professional, whether they are working or not, can join," he said, adding that emergency medical technicians and paramedics are also welcome.

For more information or to join, call MIMS secretary Valerie Gray, 52224.

Snack bar offers best of menu items ...

Mark Fuller, DSC snack bar manager.

The downtime allowed the management to revisit procedures and the menu, finding more efficient means to operate, reducing staff from 10 to six full-time employees, and building the offerings around the stronger items on the menu. Sodexo officials discussed the plans with Marshallese members of the staff to get their take on what would and wouldn't work. As a result, the DSC snack bar won't offer nightly specials featured at other retail food outlets on island, but will rather concentrate on specialty foods for which the snack bar is known.

"We're going to work on a few good things, do it well and do it fast," said Farida Straub, Sodexo director of operations.

Specifically, the DSC snack bar will feature a full breakfast buffet including eggs, rice and pancakes, made from a batter recipe unique to the snack bar. Lunch and dinner will focus on a slew of grill items and particularly favorites such as the chicken and rice dinners and the ever-popular egg-burger, a hamburger with egg served on a bun.

"It's ohno [good]," Robert said.

Also, the DSC snack bar will offer fruit, bread and rolls.

"There's going to be plenty of people," said Majina Jacklick.

For the next two weeks now, Fuller and his crew will scrub the facility down and prepare for the reopening. Fortunately, the preparations will take little more than a thorough cleaning and restocking the facility.

"Everything's there, ready to go," Fuller said.

MIT, Army join forces on nanotechnology

From U.S. Army Public Affairs

The U.S. Army Research Office announced this week that the Massachusetts Institute of Technology will serve as the newest Army-sponsored University-Affiliated Research Center for the Institute for Soldier Nanotechnologies.

The ISN will provide the Army with a corps of expertise in the development and application of nanotechnology for the soldier, including the creation of uniforms and materials that could help heal soldiers, protect against bullets, chemical agents or monitor a soldier's life support processes.

"Soldiers are at the center of Army Transformation. Establishing the ISN is the first step in our journey to achieve revolutionary materials [and] capabilities for individual soldier protection — for both the Objective Force Warrior and Future Combat Systems," said Dr. Michael Andrews, Deputy Assistant Secretary (Research & Technology) and Army Chief scientist. "New technologies and developments by ISN in nanotechnology will bring significant progress in the Army's transformation of soldier equipment."

ISN's purpose is to conduct unclassified basic research to advance the state-of-the-art in nanotechnology and to leverage breakthroughs in nanoscience.

Nanotechnology is the ability to engineer structures that have at least one dimension of 100 nanometers or less, and assembling these structures into useful macroscopic systems to build materials with combinations of useful properties that have never been possible. The ISN partners with industry and with DoD research organizations to accelerate the transition of its research into products with military and commercial applications.

"The Army research and development community looks forward to working with MIT to develop the soldier capabilities of the future," said Dr. Robert W. Whalin, U.S. Army Research Laboratory director. "MIT's commitment ... will enhance survivability, agility and lethality enhancements for soldiers."

Two Kwajalein Boy Scouts received Scouting's highest rank from its top-ranking officer Wednesday night.

Chief Scout Executive Roy Williams presented Eagle Scout awards to Tanner Duncan and Robbie Hamill and their parents at Bucholz Army Airfield terminal.

"It's a great honor to me whenever I get to do this," Williams said. "I always get a little choked up because I know what kind of hard work goes into this."

Williams and his entourage, including Scout executives from the Aloha Council, were touring the Scouting programs in the Pacific when the Continental flight stopped at Kwajalein to refuel, according to Robert Nakagawa, Pacific Basin Scouting director. Knowing ahead of time that Williams would pass through here, and knowing the two Scouts recently completed their Board of Reviews, officials, including Nakagawa, pushed the Eagle Scout paperwork through the approval process to allow Williams to present the awards during the stop.

"It makes the trip extra special," Nakagawa said.

Both Duncan and Hamill, 16, earned the rank after about eight years in Scouting, each starting with Cub Scouts, and hours devoted to public service. Eagle Scouts must complete a service project of their own, among other requirements. Duncan collected clothes and toys in Germany, where his family lived at the time, and sent them to an orphanage in Romania. Hamill installed a flag pole at George Seitz Elementary School.

Nationally, only 2½ percent of scouts achieve the rank, according to Troop 314 Scoutmaster Frank Pichler. Of the 22 scouts in Kwajalein Troop 314, two earned the rank this week, and four more will receive the honor later this summer, giving the Kwajalein troop a higher than normal average.
