Using a well-worn template, Kai Kalahiki pieces together a chopper bike that is destined for display on the Fourth of July. Kalahiki said he started building his own bikes, each a little different, when he discovered that he could do a good job fixing a broken one.

Bike inventors turn junk into well-oiled machines

"To invent, you need a good imagination and a pile of junk."

—Thomas Edison

Feature Writer

The "pile of junk" is located near the west end of the island, where a small sign proclaims it as "Bicycle Heaven." Kai Kalahiki, Al Chappel and Robin Lee each own a "good imagination" when it comes to turning the junk into streamlined, customized cruisers, choppers, high-rise, low-riders and even recumbent bikes.

"Al, he does the aluminum bikes. Kai ... he does all those cool looking cruisers and Lee, aluminum low-riders," said Craig McCarraher, who owns one of Lee's steel blue low-riders.

The inventors started out with their own specialty type of bicycle, so a resident could point to a bike and say, "That bike is one of ...," filling in the blank with the appropriate name. But now the lines are blurred, although there are still some identifying characteristics.

Lee started building bikes on Kwajalein five years ago. Choppers, bikes with long front forks and small wheels in the front, were his first inventions, and then he started making low-riders and aluminum trailers.

"I started tinkering around," said Lee, who PCSed last month. "I would take an existing bike and break it apart. It takes about three weeks. In the past two years, [I've] made about four or five."

New Homeland Security Dept. taking shape

By Sgt. 1st Class Kathleen T. Rhem
American Forces Press Service

WASHINGTON — Preventing future terrorist attacks will be the No. 1 priority of the new Department of Homeland Security proposed by President Bush.

White House Homeland Security director Tom Ridge outlined the goals of the proposed new cabinet department during testimony today before the Senate Governmental Affairs Committee. He said the current patchwork of activities related to homeland security would transform as members of a single, integrated department.

Currently, responsibility for protecting America is dispersed among more than 100 different government organizations, he said.

Ridge has been director of the Office of Homeland Security since that office's inception in October 2001. By executive order, he's charged to lead a transition planning office under the Office of Management and Budget to create the new department.

Ridge told senators he hopes the new department will put more security officers in the field to fight terrorism and to reduce redundancy among agencies that "drain(s) away critical homeland security resources."

He likened the National Strategy for Homeland Security to the National Security Strategy as "the intellectual underpinning to guide the decision making of planners, budgeters and policy makers for years to come." Ridge said Bush is expected to announce the homeland security strategy sometime "later this summer."

Baby bags project a community effort

It could not have worked out better if I had used a magic wand. Instead there was a very generous community, people who know their jobs and do them well and volunteers who serve with the highest degree of professionalism.

I'm referring to the recent distribution of baby supplies to the Ebeye community. I give a resounding thank you to every organization, person and corporation that donated money. Your monetary gifts laid the foundation for the project's decisive success.

Paul Divinski and Eileen Carson assisted with purchasing supplies. The book-keeping and administrative duties were kept in order by The Protestant Congregation of Island Memorial Chapel Advisory Board and Sylvia Riley.

Thank you for lending your expertise to this event.

To the volunteers who were mentioned in the June 14 Hourglass article and all who helped decorate and fill bags, thank you. You transformed indistinguishable canvas bags into special carryalls, as unique as the babies who received them.

Finally, to Karen Hillis and the Hourglass staff: Thanks for capturing the essence of the event and presenting it to the community. Good job!

Kwaj ... going once, going twice — sold to the shaggy-bearded editor

OK. I can't stand not knowing any longer.

That's why I've taken out a small loan from my bank, maxed out my credit cards and, assuming I can get top secret clearance in the next week or so, I've thrown my hat into the proverbial ring for the logistical and technical contracts at USAKA.

I can't lose.

For one thing, I've got very little overhead — just a laptop, a few pizza orders for those all-night jam sessions to complete my proposal and a new calculator able to handle a few more zeroes than usual.

Second, and this is most important, I'm extremely confident that my bid will be well under my competitors. Why? I've got a number of cost-cutting ideas so cheap they make Wal-Mart look like L.L. Bean in comparison.

For example, one major expense is food services, one I've struggled with for quite a while, but Col. Wrenn gave me a perfect solution at last Saturday's Army Birthday Ball — MREs. That's right, we just stock up on Meals Ready to Eat and close down the dining halls. That beef stew wasn't half bad, and I hear the pasta with Alfredo sauce is "da bomb."

Now, I'm no engineer, but I've seen a couple of episodes of "Junkyard Wars," so I think I'm not out of line by saying we can do much more with less. Again, I take my inspiration from the command — reduce, reduce, reduce the footprint.

For instance, do we really need all of those radars on Roi-Namur? How many foreign launches are we really expecting out of Russia these days? The last time the Russian government even properly paid any of their rocket scientists, President Bush the elder was still in office and fax machines were the wave of the future. (Today, thanks to e-mail, they make neat paperweights.)

According to my calculations, all we need is one radar, a couple of hand-held GPSes (or one Ron Gamble, if we just strap a manta ray onto whatever it is that's launched into the lagoon) and a guy with some very expensive binoculars.

Now, I know what you're thinking: "Peter, these are brilliant ideas, but the competition is nearly over. It's too late to submit a proposal."

Obviously, none of you naysayers (now with very little job security after daring to oppose me), read page 1,012 in the RFP (Really Fuzzily written Proposal), which states, "In the unlikely event, pursuant to federal statutes 12-134, 12-137 and 12-432, governing the business practices of the Italian mafia, Japanese yakuza and individual third-party businessmen, the Government will consider bids submitted past the RFP deadline and possibly, if extenuating circumstance permit, after the bid has already been awarded to another party."

Applications to my new company, Rejcek Remedial Engineering, or RRE, can be submitted at my BQ room.

Pacific Club getting overhaul

By Peter Rejcek
Associate Editor

The Pacific Club is receiving a major overhaul this summer thanks to the generosity of the command and the hard work of some folks willing to give up part of their weekends to help.

The focus of the renovation is the roof, which has been leaking badly, making the concrete underneath very slippery, according to Jerry Geronimo, who is helping oversee the project.

In fact, the roof had been in such bad shape that braces had to be installed for support. All of the plywood has been replaced, and a crew was contracted to tar and seal the roof.

USAKA has provided $18,000 for materials and services toward the effort, said Byron Brown, who works for USAKA and was at the Pacific Club Monday helping paint and clean up the club.

"Everybody has a hand in it," said Lee Allas, who is the de facto caretaker of the club and member of the Filipino Civic Club, which maintains the 3,000-square-foot facility.

Other work, some of which is already done, includes painting, cleaning, renovating the bathrooms and replacing a couple of back walls that were in disrepair, causing electrical shorts.

"Every time you touched the wall, you'd get shocked," Geronimo said.

Originally built in 1972, the club's history actually goes back to the 1960s, when it was a thatched-roof shelter built by bachelors, according to a 1997 Hourglass article. In January 1988, Tropical Storm Roy damaged the building, according to a 1991 edition of "Analysis of Existing Facilities." However, the 1997 Hourglass story says the building was severely damaged by Zelda in 1991.

Today, many organizations and private individuals use the facility, which includes an air-conditioned kitchen with stoves, refrigerators and sinks, for parties, graduations and gatherings.

While the Filipino club is taking the lead in restoring the building to its former glory, other volunteers are showing up to help.

One was Debbie Thomas, who could be found spraying Pacific Club logos onto the bottom of new plastic chairs. Thomas said she decided to help because "I figure we have a lot of TDY people who use it."

Chris Fox saw the ad in last week's Hourglass asking for help with the renovation and answered the call. "I use it, so I figured I should help," she said.

Work will continue for the next several weeks. If someone wants to help, simply stop by the club after 8:30 a.m. on Sundays.

Anthropologist at Tarawa this week to take remains back to CILHI

By Peter Rejcek
Associate Editor

An anthropologist with the U.S. Army Central Identification Laboratory in Hawaii was expected to stop at Tarawa, Republic of Kiribati, this week in connection with the discovery of possible U.S. remains at a former World War II battle site.

Tom Maus, with the U.S. Embassy in Majuro, which is helping coordinate the recovery effort, reported via e-mail that Dr. Chris Monahan, an anthropologist with CILHI, arrived at Tarawa Atoll Tuesday.

As reported in the June 11 Hourglass, Peace Corps volunteers alerted the U.S. Embassy about the remains, which have not yet been identified as American, though the bones were reportedly found with camouflage clothing and holding a grenade. Further, they were discovered on Betio Island, the site of a fierce battle between the Japanese and U.S. in a shipyard where construction workers were digging a hole for a lamp post.

Monahan diverted to Tarawa on his way back from a CILHI recovery mission at Papua New Guinea.

Maus said the recovery effort is a "great example of Peace Corps, State Department and Army cooperation."

CILHI is the agency that conducted a recovery mission for nine World War II Marines at Kwajalein earlier this year. Their remains were not found.

Further details will follow as they become available.

Inventors find inspiration from each other, Internet ...

make many bikes while he was on Kwaj, one of Lee's choppers was responsible for Kalahiki taking up his bike-building hobby.

"[Lee] made the first chopper, and it went through a bunch of different owners and it finally came to me," Kalahiki said. "I rode it and broke it, so I fixed it. I thought, 'Well, if I can fix them, I can start making them.'"

Crediting Chappel as his bike construction mentor, Kalahiki said that at first he had someone else weld, but then started welding his own bikes. He has made over 20 bikes using different wooden templates — one for choppers, one for cruisers and now one for recumbent bikes — to keep the proportions correct.

"I'll put a bunch of stuff together and see how it's going to fit before I cut it out," he said, piecing together a bike like a large metal puzzle on the floor of his bike shop, surrounded by wheels and gears. Kalahiki uses a lot of epoxy, smoothing one piece into another, giving his bikes the curved, almost lyrical lines that distinguish his creations, along with the colorful professional paint jobs.

He works on more than one bike at a time.

"With cutting the frame apart and welding it together, doing all the body work and the painting, it is probably eight to 10 solid hours just working on one bike," he said. "Got to let stuff dry and I get tired of looking at it ... If you are doing quality work, you don't want to make it feel like it's work, otherwise you're not going to do a good job."

Chappel's bikes are distinguished by angular lines and their weight.

"I make heavy cruisers," said Chappel, who also makes a lot of high-rise bikes. "People like my bikes.

"Now, I'm working on the front end of a five-wheeler," he said, picking up a heavy frame in his small shop. "This is going to be a beautiful thing."

Lorraine McGinnis, who says she has problems riding regular two-wheeled bikes, said that Chappel came up with a solution that she likes. "He made a bicycle into a tricycle and put seven gears in it. ...

Mine is the first tricycle made," she said.

Chappel started building bikes in 1999, just "as something to do.

"I've put out over 50 bikes," he said. "I get a concept and somebody likes it, so I make it for them. My bikes definitely have squarer proportions than Kai's."

Like Chappel, Lee sold some of the bikes he made, but Kalahiki doesn't — he gives them to friends when he is done riding them or he gets a new idea.

"Actually, I don't sell my stuff; I'm not making them for money ... I'm making them for myself," Kalahiki said. "Just because I'm trying to make the ultimate bike ... it's never-ending because once you do one bike and you ride it around for a while, then you get a different idea."

Both Kalahiki and Chappel frequent Bicycle Heaven, but Chappel, who uses both aluminum and steel parts, said he

"tries to use as many new parts as possible," and gets many of his bikes from people PCSing or when they get rid of an old bike.

"I use parts from about five different bikes," said Kalahiki, who also gets old bikes from friends. "I probably know every frame that is in [Bicycle Heaven] because I go and look over everything."

The two friends help each other with parts, machining and painting, Chappel said, walking back to his shop after asking Kalahiki if he had a certain type of gear available in his shop.

All three inventors come up with their own ideas of what constitutes a comfortable bike, although all admit to some design failures. But those are quickly remedied.

"I draw it out on a piece of paper and if it looks comfortable, I'll make it," Lee said. "If it's not comfortable, then all I have to do is chop it back up, but it usually works out good. I've only had to do that to two so far."

Although Kalahiki looks on the Internet for ideas, combining designs from others with his own, Chappel said, "I try not to take input from any source ... that way the ideas are straight out of me. I have to look [on the Internet] sometimes to find out the way a mechanism works."

Because of bad knees, both Kalahiki and Chappel are currently tinkering with recumbent bikes.

Al Chappel buffs the weld joints of a recumbent bike he is building for his own use. He has invented and built more than 50 bikes, which are distinguished by their straight lines and heavy frames.

Homeland Security Department to fight terrorism ...

The basic tenets of the homeland security strategy will be taken care of by the new Department of Homeland Security.

Because terrorism is a global threat, complete control over who and what enters the United States is essential. "We must prevent foreign terrorists from entering and bringing in instruments of terror, while at the same time facilitate the legal flow of people and goods on which our economy depends," Ridge said.

He noted five separate departments currently share responsibility for aspects of this critical mission. The new department would unify authority over the Coast Guard (Transportation Department), Customs Service (Treasury), Immigration and Naturalization Service (Justice), the Animal and Plant Health Inspection Service (Agriculture), and the recently created Transportation Security Administration.

"The new department would unify government's efforts to secure our borders and the transportation systems that move people from our borders to anywhere within our country within hours," Ridge said.

Although prevention is the most important goal, "we cannot assume that we will always succeed, therefore we must also prepare to recover as quickly as possible from attacks that do occur," he said.

The new department would control federal grant programs for local and state first responders such as the fire fighters, the police and emergency medical personnel. Ridge called these first responders, "the humble heroes that we kind of took for granted in our communities before 9-11 and suddenly are now a forefront of our efforts."

The new department would oversee a national incident-response plan that would consolidate existing federal government emergency response plans into one genuinely all-hazard plan, Ridge said.

The department would also see to it that all first responders have the equipment and training they need to do their jobs more effectively and efficiently.

Current efforts to counter threats from weapons of mass destruction are "too few and too fragmented," Ridge said.

He said there's no doubt that if terrorists acquired such weapons they'd use them.

"We must launch a systematic national effort against these weapons that is equal in size to the threat they pose," Ridge said.

Such a national effort would incorporate state and local authorities as well. "The Department of Homeland Security would set national policy and establish guidelines for state and local governments to plan for the unthinkable and direct exercises and drills for federal, state and local officials," he said.

Jeramon non kom

"Jeramon non kom" is the Marshallese way to say, "Goodbye and good luck friends."

ED BALDRIDGE departs tomorrow for California on Aloha Airlines. He was lead custodian for RSE.

Ed was on his third tour of Kwaj, this one for a year.

He says, "Yokwe, aloha. First of all, I would like to thank Susan Kleback for giving me the opportunity to do my third tour. I was laid off, but would love to come back. I will miss my staff of Marshallese; they are beautiful people. Also, the friends I have met this time and the past friends. This is a beautiful island, and I will never forget it. I will be at Kwaj Lodge tomorrow at 7 a.m. for a cup of coffee. Come on down. Love you all."

RUDY and VICKY GIL, along with GISELLE and RUDY JR, departed Monday for Huntsville, Ala.

Vicky will work at the Huntsville Airport with Continental Airlines, and Rudy will be at the Kwajalein Support Directorate.

In farewell, they say, "The time has come for the Gil family to return to the 'real world.' We take with us wonderful memories of our time on island, and will surely miss the Kwaj lifestyle and our Kwaj family."

Bikes to be on display at Fourth of July ...

"The choppers are mostly for looks; they are uncomfortable to ride," Kalahiki said. "I bought the recumbent from someone on Roi. I started riding it around ... this is way comfortable."

Because he likes to ride his own creations, Kalahiki is currently making his own recumbent bike.

Meanwhile, over at Chappel's shop, since he is just recovering from knee surgery, a heavy-duty recumbent destined for use by its designer is taking shape along with the five-wheeler.

Both Kalahiki and Chappel are also putting in extra hours right now to get ready for a Fourth of July customized bike display.

"I'll try to get some other bikes I've already made for others to display," Kalahiki said, adding that he is also planning to showcase four new bikes currently under construction. Chappel said he would have a few bikes ready for the bike show.

Although it's fun to see the bikes they've made around the island, being able to get away and create is the best part, all three inventors said.

"It's my outlet," Chappel said. "I can come out here where there is a breeze and no mosquitoes ... it's a place to relax."

"I'm trying to make the ultimate bike ... it's never-ending, because once you do one bike and you ride it around for a while, then you get a different idea."

Son of Kwaj resident tackles professional football

By Barbara Johnson

Feature Writer

A player with a Kwaj connection is on the NFL football lineup this fall. Wesly Mallard, son of local resident Bill Mallard, was selected in this year's draft to play for the New York Giants.

He was chosen in the sixth round as the 188th overall pick, Bill Mallard said. "He'll be playing outside linebacker and special teams, wearing number 51."

Bill Mallard is site manager for Northrop Grumman Information Technology at Kwaj.

Mallard, 23, a graduate of the University of Oregon with a major in English literature, completed most of his high school education in Korea, where his dad was a first sergeant in the Army. He played high school football for the Yongsan Raiders of Korea and attended mostly DODS schools, Bill Mallard said.

"I was a single parent; it was just the two of us."

The leading tackler for the Oregon Ducks last year, Mallard became interested in a pro career in his senior year, his dad said.

He said he is very proud of his son. "You can't imagine." He has all the rings and jerseys from the five college bowls his son played in, and saw him play in his final college game for Oregon last season.

"I was really impressed," he said.

According to the Giants' Web site, in his senior year Mallard moved into Oregon's starting lineup at right outside linebacker and led the team with a career-high 111 tackles.

He "possesses the type of speed that people look for at the next level, yet presents the toughness required at the line of scrimmage," according to the Giants' Web site. "... few players elicit the amount of respect the former walk-on attracts. ... One of the Duck's best athletes, he also excelled on the school's track team," according to the Web site.

Mallard was profiled in a December Stars and Stripes article prior to playing Colorado in the Fiesta Bowl, when the Oregon Ducks were ranked No. 2 in the nation.

"Frequently, the kids think because they're from a little league way out in the sticks that they can't make it ... And yet, here's a kid who has the talent, goes there [Oregon] as a walk-on, and makes it as a starting linebacker for the No. 2 team in the country. It says a lot about his will to succeed," said Bob Collins, a former coach of Mallard's in Korea, in the Stars and Stripes article.

According to the article, Mallard is only the second player in the past 10 years from an overseas DoD installation to be an NFL draft pick. The other was Eric Zeier, who played at Heidelberg American High in Germany.

"Not a lot of players make it out of this level. For me, it took a lot of hard work and patience," Mallard said.

"He's an intense competitor. He has great enthusiasm for the game. He's fun to watch," said Oregon coach Mike Belotti in Stars and Stripes.

Mallard believes his career sends a message to others in DoD football programs overseas that they can do it too.

He said, "Always believe in yourself, no matter what anybody says what your talents and abilities are. Be persistent. Be patient. And it will happen."

Another pro football player with a Kwaj connection is Todd Lyght, who was born at Kwajalein in 1969 and plays for the Detroit Lions. He went to the Super Bowl with the St. Louis Rams in 2000, and was a Pro Bowl selection also that year.

PASSPORT SERVICES regards the loss of a passport as a serious matter. Lost and stolen passports are often used for fraudulent purposes and could be used by terrorists to gain access to the United States. Be advised that the loss, theft or destruction of a passport must be reported immediately to local police authorities and to the Legal Office on Kwajalein or to the nearest American Embassy or Consulate. Your passport is a valuable citizenship and identity document. It must be carefully safeguarded. Its loss could cause you unnecessary travel complications as well as significant expense. Upon receipt of your passport immediately sign your passport, make two copies of the signature and photo pages. Keep one copy in a safe place at home (not with your passport). While traveling, carry the other copy separate from your passport. If your passport is misplaced or stolen, your photocopy will give you the information to report to the police. It is of utmost importance that you also read the important information provided in your passport. Also, you must complete another page with your permanent address, your address while traveling and the point of contact in case of emergency.

Volunteers help landscape youth center

By Peter Rejcek
Associate Editor

Thanks to a generous donation of plants by PCSing residents and time by a number of volunteers, the Namu Weto Youth Center is the latest spot on island to flourish with flora.

With the help of a crew from Waste Management, volunteers landscaped the area around the building, with the most effort on the end that fronts Lagoon Road.

"It's really a contribution by everybody," said Amy Storey, Public Gardens coordinator, who lent her expertise and sweat to the project.

About 50 plants were donated, mainly by residents who were PCSing, according to Erika Cole, Community Activities Youth supervisor. The new flora includes a 10-foot ficus tree, lilies, a bird of paradise, a banana tree and plumeria, according to Storey.

"This is going to be an amazing transformation when it's done," she said.

Most of the work was completed Monday afternoon, thanks to additional community volunteers who showed up throughout the day, Cole said.

"It looks really great," she said.
