Halloween memory comes in crystal clear

Halloween is more than costumes, pumpkins and candy. It is a time of make believe that borders on the edge of reality — at least for children who are young enough to still believe they can grow up to be princesses and ninjas like the ones that are knocking at your door this evening. It is also one of the events in my life that produced what I call crystal memories.

Every year, I searched through pattern books to make my daughter, Katie, the perfect costume for Halloween. I started the costume at least two months before the big night. She dressed up as a clown — a good costume to fit over a snowsuit so she could go trick or treating when we lived in Alaska — as a lion, complete with yarn-implanted hair and her face painted to look like the Wizard of Oz Cowardly Lion; as a pink bunny complete with paws and, of course, floppy ears; and my favorite, as an American Indian complete with papoose doll on her back when she was 4 years old.

One of my favorite photos is one I took of her in that costume. With her back turned towards me to show off the papoose and her head turned to the side. Part Osage Indian from her red-headed father's side of the family, the costume fitted my reddish-blond haired, green-eyed daughter as if what she wore were her everyday clothes and not a costume at all. October's short days with the soft light of a late fall northern Virginia evening lit the entire tableau in gold.

I can remember this, not because of the photo, one of the few I brought with me to Kwajalein, but because that moment in time is one of my crystal moments.

I can think of that time and Kwajalein's heat and humidity fades away along with the years. As I "see" her again in that stance, the light even seems a little golden.

I hope you have crystal moments even if you don't have children or they have grown up.

They are, at least in my experience, a little moment in time that seems to stretch on a little longer and has a special quality even when it is happening and they don't stop happening even as you get older.

Those moments don't have to be saved around special events or holidays, although that is a source for many of them. The key is being aware that a particular moment is special.

My editor Jim just had a crystal moment on Tuesday. His 2-year-old daughter, Marissa, in Hawaii, because she and her Mom are on their way back to the states for baby brother Jack's birth, called her Daddy at work.

"I'm sad," she said to her Daddy because he wasn't with them right now. "You take care of the cats."

Sometimes special moments do occur around annual events like Christmas or Hanukah, Thanksgiving or Fourth of July when you get together with family and friends. Those moments — what people keep in their memories to look back on again and again, are probably as different as each person.

But I suspect there are some common crystal moments — when you know you are meeting that special person in your life; when you fly from Kwajalein to the states and see your Mom, Dad, sister, brother, child or friend after a long separation; a brand-new box of crayons; a cup of cocoa and a good book on a rainy day (we have a lot of those); your baby's first step or saying, "I'm sad" because she misses you; or the 10th wedding anniversary of your child who between reality and make believe wore a homemade American Indian costume so many years ago.

Parents say 'No' to tolerance

By Jim Bennett

A group of parents and teachers called for zero tolerance for youthful drug offenders on-island during a meeting on islandwide drug abuse Tuesday night.

"The only way you're going to get rid of the drug use on-island, which is minor compared to the states, but it's still there, is zero tolerance," said Tom Farris, a school teacher, prompting the loudest applause of the evening.

The meeting stemmed from a police investigation two weeks ago into the illegal use of prescription medications by four juveniles, and the discussion followed a short panel talk given by Dr. Eric Lindborg, Kwajalein Hospital's chief medical officer, and Officer Jody Munson, KPD's D.A.R.E. officer.

Munson outlined the newly revised 10-week curriculum to the police department's drug education program, which is given to all sixth graders and Lindborg described the medical impacts of drug abuse.

Munson said the program was revised from the previous program, which was developed in 1993.

"Basically, we talk about the negative effects to try to help them make a good decision," Munson said.

The program was cut from 18 weeks to 10, but streamlined and updated, with less repetition and more modern examples.

Under further discussion, Ammann and school teachers agreed that along with D.A.R.E., Kwajalein students also receive drug and alcohol education in the health curriculum.

Meanwhile, Lindborg noted that as a 22-year resident he didn't see drug or alcohol use as any greater trend than in years past, but added the importance of "trying to figure out a way to handle it."

Speaking to the half-dozen kids in the audience, Lindborg said, "Why are we concernend for you guys when mom and dad or their co-workers can go to the club and chug two or three beers at a time?"

He answered by describing how the nervous system in youths, even teenagers, is still growing.

"Critical pathways are being formed," he said. "As a youngster ... drugs can lead some development astray, and that can lead to some long-term problems."

But much of the meeting focused on catching youthful offenders and punishing them.

Parents questioned why police didn't catch kids more often, to which KPD Police Chief Kevin Dykema, who was in the audience, answered "Many times we do make apprehensions. Many times we have parents come back and say, 'You're targeting my child.' ... For the most part, the kids out here are well-behaved, respectful. There's a small sect that have turned to a bad situation."

By zero tolerance, Farris, and others who spoke, suggested that juveniles caught using illegal drugs should be barred from the island, regardless of the number of offenses they have or who their parents are.

KPD Police Chief Kevin Dykema said no kids had been barred in the past 2½ years while he's been chief, but old-timers in the crowd said it has happened in the past.

"As commanders change, the rules change. It comes down to the command," said Masina McCollum, a former Kwaj kid and currently a teacher at George Seitz Elementary School. "You can't expect kids not to do things, but it does make a difference."

Kids in the audience agreed the most common punishments such as community service do not deter youths from the crime.

"I've heard a lot of people say 'I'll put in 30 hours. It's no big deal,'" said student Luke Riley.

High school counselor Bob Ammann said he couldn't speak for the command and had not invited a command representative to the panel. In addition, the USAKA legal department is in transition.

The current school policy on youths caught with drugs — either illicit or illegal controlled substances such as prescription drugs — calls for an automatic suspension, Ammann said.

LuAnne Fantasia, USAKA Public Affairs officer, said Wednesday, "Although the commander was off-island during these recent events, he is aware of the circumstances," Fantasia said. "This is included on the agenda for the Nov. 14 Kwajalein town hall, and I'm sure Col. Brown will address it at that time."

Parents at the meeting said they hoped to arrange a follow-up meeting with a command representative where they can discuss further ramifications.

Opening day of soccer season on Kwajalein started last Wednesday with the Hacker's Doves taking on Jabro, Sudden Rush going up against Strikers and Kicked Back playing Spartans Girls.

There are 21 teams in this year's soccer season. In the Men's A Division six teams will vie for top honors with five teams in each of the Men's B Division; the Women's A Division and the Women's B Division, with an average of 15 players per team, said Kaya Landers, adult athletic supervisor.

Kwajalein high school fields seven teams this season; three men's and four women's teams. Ebeye will have one men's and one women's team from each of three schools.

The schedule follows a double round-robin format, with each team playing eight games before the play-offs, said Landers. Regular league play runs through Dec. 17, with play-offs on Dec. 18-20. Men's teams play on Tuesday, Thursday and Friday at 5:15; 6:45 and 8 p.m.

Women play on Wednesday and Saturday with Wednesday's games starting at 5:15; 6:45 and 8 p.m. Saturday's games are at 5 and 6:30 p.m., to allow for the movies at the Richardson Theater, said Landers.

Halloween Haunts Island

Little princesses, ninjas, superheroes and Britney Spears look-alikes, among others, filled the Corlett Recreation Center Monday for the annual Halloween Costume Carnival.

The event featured games for the children, like pin the nose on the pumpkin, a witches hat ring toss and a ghoulish hopscotch, along with a frost-your-own-cookie table and make-your-own goody bag center.

Capping the festivities, children from each age group showed off their outfits during the parade of costumes, which organizers divided into each age group.

The annual carnival followed the Shaving Cream Social, held last Friday where more than 160 kids sprayed foam on teachers, helpers and fellow students — not to mention themselves, during the annual event.

The events preceded the slew of activities set for this weekend, beginning tonight.

For the children, trick-or-treating will run from 6:30-8:30 p.m. The visiting band JagStar, sponsored by Armed Forces Entertainment, will play the Teen Center at 7 p.m.

JagStar played Wednesday on Roi-Namur and Thursday on Emon Beach.

Meanwhile, many unaccompanied adults will attend the Catamaran Costume Carnival, sponsored by the Protestant chapel. The boat will head out at 6 p.m. for a two-hour, sunset cruise.

JagStar will headline the adult costume party at Gilligan's Saturday night, starting at 9 p.m.

Marine Raiders tell their own stories of war life

By Jan Waddell
Reporter

In 1942, an elite fighting force took shape, the Marine Raiders. In two short years these young men would make their mark in history with well-known campaigns such as, Guam, Okinawa, Guadalcanal and Iwo Jima.

Those who were there also remember other battles, like Makin Island.

After the Makin battle, 30 Marine Raiders were unaccounted for.

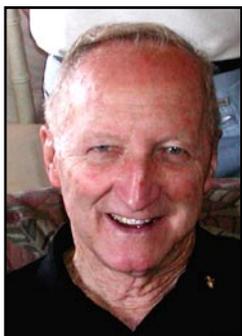

In 1999, the Joint Personnel Accounting Command, then-Central Identification Laboratory in Hawaii, recovered and repatriated 19 who died during the battle and were buried on Butaritari Island. For many, the fate of the remaining 11 Marine Raiders remains a mystery.

Several WWII Marine Raiders, along with other veterans, will visit Kwajalein, Nov. 8-12, to attend the dedication of the Makin Raider monument which honors their fallen and missing comrades. They will participate in the dedication of the monument, Veterans Day ceremonies and the United States Marine Corps 228th Birthday Ball along with several other activities.

Some of the veterans attending the ceremonies have provided some brief information about themselves.

Elmer Mapes — Mapes was a 2nd Battalion Raider, but didn't join the Raiders until several months after they returned from the Makin Raid. He took part in the Bougainville, Solomon Islands Campaign, the liberation of Guam and the Okinawa Campaign. His battalion, which was at that time the 2nd Battalion, 4th Regiment, was the first to set foot in Japan.

Mapes was 20 years old when he enlisted in the Marine Corps. He served for three years, one month and one day. His hometown was Muscatine, Iowa and currently lives in Bettendorf, Iowa.

Elmer Mapes

Ashley (Bill) W. Fisher — Fisher enlisted on Jan. 27, 1942, at age 16. He served in the guard detachment on Ford Island until he joined B Company, 2nd Raider Battalion, on Sept. 4, 1942.

He did not participate in the raid on Makin, but served with the Raiders through 1943, including the Long Patrol on Guadalcanal.

Fisher served 38 years on active duty and as a reservist, retiring at the rank of major. He was born and raised in Memphis, Tenn., and now lives in Brighton, Tenn., 36 miles north of Memphis.

"I know I speak for all of us that we are especially grateful to Jack Miller for conceiving this memorial and to Dr. [Lewis] Bernstein [SMDC historian] for his diligence," Fisher said. "It is long over due."

Jack Freeling — Freeling was in the 4th Marine Raiders. He was at Kwajalein on his way to the Guam Operation in mid-1944.

He enlisted at Kansas City, Mo. at 19 years of age, and was discharged in 1945.

Col. James Roosevelt selected him with three others for the 4th Raider Battalion after only a 10-minute interview.

He carried a B.A.R. [Browning Automatic Rifle] in the early part of the war, an M-1 rifle and, during his last trip, a carbine.

"We did make the landings at New Georgia and Vangunu in 1943 and a landing on an unnamed Solomon Island, reported to have a Jap outpost," Freeling said. "It was reported by a low-flying Navy pilot on his way back to the island of Guadalcanal. He thought he saw a Jap outpost. Turned out, the Navy and Marines ran us out on the S168 Nautilus and made a landing that scared the h--- out of a bunch of Army guys. Lucky no one was hurt. Case of lack of communicating at the time," he added.

According to Freeling, the Japanese left him with a piece of shrapnel in his arm, which has moved up about four inches, resulting in the loss of some dexterity.

"[The war] kept me off the streets and out of jail," Freeling said. "Pay at discharge with overseas add-on was $69.30, as a corporal."

Ervin Kaplan — Kaplan was born June 19, 1918, in Independence, Iowa. He attended premedical school in Chicago from 1937-40, which was interrupted when he enlisted in the Marines, May 12, 1941.

He attended boot camp and radio school at San Diego with H and S Company, 2nd Marines at Camp Elliot.

Kaplan volunteered for 2nd Marine Raider Battalion, Feb. 1942, at first call. He trained as a radioman at Jacque's Farm, San Clemente and Oahu.

Following the Makin battle he embarked for Midway.

Kaplan was at Espiritu Santo, New Hebrides with Company E during the assault landing at Aola Bay, Guadalcanal, Nov. 4, 1942, and completed a 30-day guerrilla mission behind Japanese lines. He was also involved in the battle at Asamana village, Nov. 11, 1942, and the battle of Numa-Numa Trail, Nov. 19, 1943.

After disbandment of Raiders he returned to San Diego, Feb. 14, 1944.

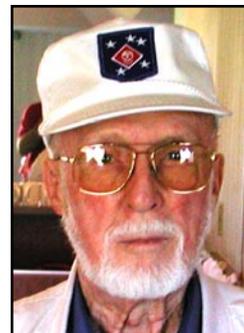

George MacRae — MacRae was 25 when he joined the Marines earning the nickname "Pop" by the 17-year-olds.

He stayed almost four years and then received a medical discharge.

MacRae is from Avalon, Catalina Island, Calif., but was born in Halifax,

Ervin Kaplan

George MacRae

Canada. He currently lives in Virginia Beach, Va.

MacRae was a private and a rifleman for the Raiders and carried a B.A.R. He also worked as a demolition man at Emirau.

He arrived late as a Raider and only saw action at Bougainville, Emirau and Guam, where he was wounded by a sniper and spent two years in a naval hospital in California.

MacRae remembered Kwajalein during the war as "only of riding around in a small boat, in a rain squall, at night, looking for the ship that had our mail," MacRae said. "We were on the way to invade Guam in July 1944 and came to Kwajalein to await a date for landing at Guam."

Mel Heckt — Heckt enlisted in the Marine Corps at age 19 and served 30 months.

He came from Grundy Center, Iowa, and now resides in Golden Valley, Minn.

Heckt trained as a Marine Raider replacement at Camp Pendleton until the Raiders were disbanded Feb. 1, 1944.

He became a 4th Marine Regiment and fought the Japanese on Emirau.

"Fortunately, the Japanese had departed a few days before we landed," Heckt said. "Thanks to our admiral prevailing over Gen. MacArthur, we landed on Emirau instead of the general's designation, namely Kavieng. There were 200,000 to 400,000 Japanese troops on Kavieng. Had the general won the argument, I undoubtedly would not be going to Kwajalein," he added.

"I was a machine gunner on Guam, a squad leader and then section leader and also platoon leader on Okinawa. I ended up a Corporal and was sent back to Quantico for officer training when the war ended."

"Out of 53 machine gunners who made the first wave on Okinawa, I was one of four who were not wounded or killed," Heckt said. "I received a bronze star for my service on Sugar Loaf Hill. The Marines were knocked off this hill 11 times before capturing it.

"We set up our evening perimeter, the first night on Okinawa. I heard a Marine yelling for help!" Heckt said. "I got five other Marines who had been Raiders, and started down this thick brush ravine. This Marine started to swear at us to hurry up. His profanity would have made an old salt blush. I swore back and advised we were coming as fast as we could."

"We get down to the bottom of the ravine and who is lying in a ditch, pinned down by a Japanese machine gun, but the most beloved chaplain in the Raiders and 4th Marines, Father Paul Redmond," Heckt added. "My face is red to this day."

"At his 90th birthday party I went up to him as he was sitting in his wheel chair and said, 'I am Mel Heckt from Minnesota., I promise not to swear at you tonight if you promise not to swear at me.' He remembered."

Ben Carson — Ben Carson was a private, 2nd Squad, 2nd Platoon, B Company, 2nd Marine Raider Battalion.

Carson was on the Makin Raid, fought on Guadalcanal, Bougainville and Iwo Jima where he was wounded on his 22nd birthday.

"After I got out of the hospital at Pearl Harbor, I returned to what was left of our former battalion and was almost immediately recruited as a squad leader in a newly formed recon platoon," Carson said. "While playing cops and robbers in the hills of the Big Island of Hawaii I learned that Japan had surrendered. Immediately I began making homecoming plans since I had accrued 123 points toward my discharge and people with 78 points were going home. The Marine Corps succinctly reminded me that I had signed up for a four-year hitch and I had four months more to serve."

Carson continued, "I was appointed an acting platoon sergeant and placed in charge of a mob of 32, just graduated, recruits destined for the occupation of Kyushu Island, Japan."

"The morning we landed at the Sasabo Naval Station seaplane ramp, the contingent officer questioned me as to what controls I had taken to prevent the most feared incident that could screw up an occupation, an accidental discharge of a weapon," Carson said. "I showed that officer the contents of my backpack. Every single ammunition clip and rifle round issued to my mob was in my pack."

"As a Makin Raider I performed all the duties that could possibly be assigned to a rear rank private. Everything from peeling potatoes to operating the enlisted men's toilet on the Argonaut submarine underway to Makin," Carson said. "My official post was tommy gunner in a three-person fire group."

"My only memory of Kwajalein during the war was a brief touch-down and refueling of our hospital plane, on our way from Guam to Pearl Harbor. The greatest impression made upon that group of shot-up gyrenes, at that brief stop, was the pilot and co-pilot supporting an almost inert navigator who, apparently had just been rescued from some officers' bar, and as that trio passed through us sitting on the floor of the plane, the skipper kept assuring everyone that the inert figure would not be permitted to drive."

Lewis Marsh, son of Raider Dan Marsh — Lewis Marsh was Dan Marsh's youngest child. When he was five-years-old the family moved to Phoenix, where they live today. He went to Bible college and is a minister, serving Christ's Church on the River in Parker, Ariz., where he has been for 16 years.

His father, Dan Marsh signed up to be a Marine right after Pearl Harbor and trained at the Marine Recruit Training Depot in San Diego. After graduating, he spent time training others, guarding the newly formed Camp Pendleton, until it was established, and preparing to go overseas.

He heard about the Raiders right as he left for a weekend leave. By the time he returned, a buddy joined the 2nd Raiders. Marsh interviewed and joined Company Q, which later changed to Company D, of the 4th Raiders.

He served with the 4th Raiders Battalion throughout its entire existence. He fought with them in New Georgia and transferred to the 3rd Battalion when the Raiders became the 4th Marines.

He served there under Stormy Sexton, throughout the campaigns of Guam and Okinawa. He was among the Marines who occupied Japan.

Missing Makin Marines ID'd

By Jan Waddell
Reporter

On Aug. 17, 1942, two submarines surfaced just outside the Butaritari Island in the Makin Atoll. Inside were 221 Marine Raiders, commanded by Col. Evans Carlson.

The Marines departed two submarines by rubber boats on a stormy night, their main mission, to destroy Japanese installations and divert Japanese reinforcements from Guadalcanal. They killed 83 Japanese and destroyed several of the installations and ships before they evacuated the area, due to heavy Japanese air attacks.

During their evacuation, Carlson paid the local Butaritari islanders to bury 18 Marines killed during the assault.

On Aug. 18, when the Marines returned to the submarines, 12 Marines remained unaccounted for.

On Oct. 16, 1942, Japanese Vice Adm. Koso Abe executed nine Marine Raiders, on Kwajalein, captured on Butaritari after the assault.

In December 1999, the then-U.S. Army Central Identification Laboratory in Hawaii and Butaritari Island natives recovered the remains of 19 Marines buried in a mass grave on Butaritari. One of the original missing 12 was in the mass grave on Butaritari. CILHI continued the search for the missing Marines on Kwajalein, excavating a portion of the island for three months in 2002, to no avail.

Presently, these 11 pictured remain listed as missing.

TDY contractor dies at hospital

By KW Hillis
Assistant Editor

Scheduled to fly home on Monday after working on Kwajalein's Fuel Pier project since Oct. 9, 29-year-old Brett LeJeune died suddenly at Kwajalein Hospital Monday morning.

"He had been getting medication and treatment for a medical problem at the hospital," said Dr. Eric Lindborg, Kwajalein Hospital chief medical officer. "He received some medication here in the emergency room as a scheduled walk-in on Monday morning and had a precipitous collapse immediately after receiving the medication."

Despite efforts from the attending medical staff, LeJeune could not be revived.

"ER personnel began resuscitation measures immediately and called in the hospital-wide code team," Lindborg said. "Interventions began within minutes, including IV fluids, resuscitation medications and cardiac shocks. Ventilation and intubation were also initiated but the patient failed to respond to all efforts."

As to the reason for his death, Lindborg said that there were a number of explanations, but that an autopsy at Tripler Army Hospital Center in Hawaii will help discover the cause. LeJeune's remains were flown to Tripler Army Hospital Center in Hawaii yesterday.

Meanwhile, the hospital is investigating locally, Lindborg said.

"There is no evidence of medication error at this time," he said. "Sometimes things happen in a hospital. Was there an erroneous medicine or the wrong dose or the wrong route? No, everything was as ordered by the attending physician."

Originally from Lafayette, La., LeJeune arrived on island with four other employees of ITA Industrial, a subcontractor of Oceaneering International Inc., to perform a mooring upgrade and put in new pilings around the Fuel Pier, said Darrell Haugh, OLL project manager.

The sudden nature of LeJeune's death stunned his fellow workers and Matt Marcy, ITA Industrial officer who was one of the four others from the company working on the pier project. He said LeJeune "was just fine" at 6:15 a.m. on Monday morning and the group had planned to fly out that evening.

"It is a very sad thing," Marcy said. "He was new to the company and was a very nice young man."

LeJeune leaves a young son and his mother.

Raiders remember heroes ...

Returning home, Marsh married, had two girls and then shipped off to Korea, where he served in A Company, 1st Battalion, 1st Marines of the 1st Marine Division. He fought in the Chosin Reservoir campaign, before returning home.

"Almost six years ago my father and I put together the first Web site on the internet solely devoted to the Raiders," Lewis said. The Web site is www.usmcraiders.com. "It's still there today and has a lot of info on him and the Raiders that I know you'd find helpful. He wrote the original articles, I do the Web page design and posting."

John McCarty — McCarty is an honorary member of the Marine Raider Association and editor of the Raider Patch, a quarterly newsletter.

He served in the United States Army in the 2nd Infantry Division, 2nd Engineer Combat Battalion.

A family friend and a man who was engaged to McCarty's sister, Robert B. Maulding, was an original member of the Carlson's 2nd Raider Battalion. Maulding was killed in action during the Makin Raid.

"I am indeed looking forward to our visit to Kwajalein and bringing final closure to the Makin story," McCarty said. "Bob Maulding was one of the 19 Raiders discovered, recovered and repatriated by CILHI and I worked very closely with them during the ID process."

"Thirteen Raiders were buried at that time," he added. "Six were buried at the hometowns at the requests of family."

William Carroll — William Carroll, originally from Indiana, enlisted in the Marines at 18.

He was a 2nd Battalion Marine Raider in the battles at Guam, Bougainville, Solomon Islands Campaign and Okinawa.

Carroll hasn't seen Kwajalein since 1944, when his ship was on its way to invade Guam, and they stopped off on Kwaj to stretch their legs, according to Carroll.

"We got a couple of warm beers," he said. "I can't believe there is anything but sand there [Kwajalein]."

When the Raiders disbanded, he became member of weapons company, 4th Marine Regiment. He also participated in the initial occupation of Yokosuka, Japan, with the 4th Marines.

"I was a rifleman and a member of rifle platoon and later a platoon runner in weapons company," Carroll said.
