Resident complains of rat infested trailers

Being a newcomer to the island, I have been reading The Hourglass which is a great source of information and has been very helpful in many ways. I was particularly interested in the article about the yard care requirements that are the resident's responsibility.

Is removal of the condemned trailers part of the commander's island beautification goals? And whose responsibility is it to remove these rat infested eyesores and how many trailers on Kwaj are condemned? I live between two of these giant "smorgasbords for rats" and Saturday night they had quite a large get-together watching Cookin' with Jolene, the Trailer Park Queen while she whipped up a tasty dish of "White Trash with Class."

Seriously, rats have contributed to the death of more humans than all the wars and revolutions in history. The worldwide damage and destruction caused by rats exceeds 200 million dollars each year. Rats destroy 20 percent of human food supplies annually, enough food to eliminate world hunger. Rats carry more than 20 often-fatal diseases, including bubonic plague, dysentery, rabies, spotted fever and many more. Dangerous disease-carrying insects infest rats, including the flea, tick, louse, mite and mosquito. A rat can smell poison one part in a million and will urinate on the poison to warn other rats not to touch it. A pair of rats can potentially produce 620,000 descendants in only three years if left unchecked. Thousands of building fires of unknown origin are caused by rats gnawing insulation from electrical wiring.

Once again: Who is responsible for the removal of these condemned trailers which are not only an eyesore but a serious public health and safety issue?

Do you know who your neighbor is?

More power to them

Kwajalein provides generators to Ebeye hospital

By J.J. Klein
Reporter

On Tuesday the Ebeye Hospital received the first of two generators, provided by U.S. Army Kwajalein Atoll/Reagan Test Site and Kwajalein Range Services, to help alleviate the electrical power demands at the hospital caused by rolling power outages.

The four-hours-on, four-hours-off distribution of power by the island's power plant had caused the hospital to rely heavily on its backup generator.

"They had experienced problems with the generator at the hospital. The Ebeye hospital initially thought their generator had minor problems, upon closer inspection, they found out the problem was larger and would require taking the generator offline to repair," said Alan Taylor, Republic of the Republic of the

Marshall Islands Relations specialist. "At that point, they requested, through the RMI government, USAKA/RTS assistance."

At the request of the USAKA Host Nation Office the portable generators were taken over to Ebeye on the ferry with the assistance of the KRS Marine Department and then installed by technicians from the Generator Shop on Kwajalein, requiring 20 hours of installation over two days.

"Both are 125 kilowatt-hour generators," said Kirby. "We were restricted to this size because of the access to the rear of the hospital." A 125 kwh generator provides 125,000 watts of power, most home emergency generators put out 12 to 15 kwh.

"We looked at the hospital load while it was on island power before we took the generators over, and the two of them should carry the hospital if those loads were typical," said Kirby.

At the time of installation the generators were delivered with a full fuel tank, with the hospital providing fuel as needed. "We are responsible for maintenance and upkeep," continued Kirby, "with one of the hospital maintenance employees doing the daily checks on the engines."

According to Jim Landgraff, USAKA Utilities evaluator, the generators are on loan for a monthly charge paid by the Ebeye Hospital.

"The hospital staff and the patients in the hospital were extremely appreciative to have power restored to the hospital," said Taylor. "Residents of Ebeye benefit from this installation; without the emergency generators, the hospital would be subject to the general power grid of Ebeye, which has been unstable for the last several months."

Not getting lost in space

Surveillance operation on Roi-Namur keeping an eye on foreign launches, man-made objects in deep space

J.J. Klein
Reporter

Staring into the night time sky, it would seem to be a vast, quiet and uncluttered place. The staff at the Space Surveillance Operations on Roi-Namur knows better.

The center is tasked by the 1st Space Control Squadron, in Cheyenne Mountain, Colo. with the mission of detecting, tracking, identifying and cataloging all man-made objects orbiting in space.

The Reagan Test Site SOPS is one of three to four sites capable of radar deep-space tracking and is part of the Space Surveillance Network. Its location near the equator makes it ideal for tracking space objects. "Other sites can't do what Kwajalein can do because of the prime location and the RTS instrumentation," said Herb Schmidt, KRS Space Surveillance Department leader. "RTS provides 24/7 all-weather coverage of roughly one third the Earth's geo belt [geosynchronous belt] that is unseen by other SSN radar elements. We are the largest contributor of radar deep-space observations."

A geosynchronous orbit means the object is orbiting the earth at the exact speed the earth is rotating. "From an observer on the ground it would appear that the satellite is staying in the same position, 24 hours a day with a little bit of wobble," said Schmidt

In addition to its location, SOPS is valuable to RTS because it is "the single, largest customer reimbursable to the Range, annually providing approximately $17 million in funding," according to Schmidt.

The SOPS staff executes deep-space surveillance activities 24 hours a day, seven days a week for 365 days of the year using the Advanced Research Project Agency Long-Range Tracking and Instrumentation Radar and the Target Resolution and Discrimination Experiment. The Advanced Research Project Agency Lincoln C-band Observable Radar and Millimeter Wave sensors also on Roi-Namur, meet external customer tasking, typically not more than 300 tracks a year. Both ALTAIR and TRADEX are high-resolution sensors capable of near-earth and deep-space tracking. ALTAIR, TRADEX, ALCOR and MMW all come under the Kiernan Reentry Measurements System umbrella.

“We make a departure between near-earth and deep-space when we hit a period of 225 minutes,” explained Schmidt. “The period is defined as the number of minutes it takes for the satellite to orbit the earth. If the satellite can orbit the earth in 225 minutes or less, or roughly within 7,000 kilometers, we call it in near-earth orbit.”

ALTAIR is the primary sensor, operating 128 hours a week with 40 hours down time for scheduled maintenance. “TRADEX provides 10 operational hours a week, plus serves as the RTS primary backup to provide seamless support to the military and our customer,” said Schmidt.

“Even on a quiet day we can never get away from the fact that we’re supporting a military mission and the need to be ready at a 15-minute recall for special tasking,” Schmidt continued. “RTS Space Surveillance supports the war fighter at home and in theater with space situational awareness. Space is the new ‘high ground’. Whether forces are in space, air, and sea or on land, space operations now play a vital role in supporting our forces.”

Located in a restricted-access area, the hub of the center is a large, darkened room filled with a bank of monitors, computers and a three person staff. The Space Surveillance Operations staff tracks satellites and relays information to Cheyenne Mountain, providing them with 24-hour coverage. At the beginning of each day the staff receives from Cheyenne Mountain a task list of about 200 objects to track. Last year SOPS tracked about 50,000 objects according to Schmidt, the majority of which were deep-space tracks and 4,000 near-earth tracks.

“Cheyenne sets the priority,” said Schmidt, “that’s the customer we are trying to meet the needs for. If you had nothing else going on, no special tracks, no launches you would basically just be tracking off of this consolidated tasking list. It’s our bread and butter tasking.”

“And then if you were to have a launch, like today, we would break off from the CTL and handle the high priority stuff, and when that’s done we go back to CTL tasking,” continued Schmidt. RTS Space Surveillance Operations supports 30-40 launch missions annually.

On this day, SOPS is interested in a commercial launch from French Guinea carrying two communications satellites. An hour and two minutes after lift off, when the rocket has moved above the curvature of the earth and is detectable by the sensor, the staff is tracking four objects, the rocket body, two payloads and the sylda. The sylda encapsulates the two payloads, keeping them separate from each other while securing them to the spacecraft.

“It’s very important to track an object as soon after launch as possible, because as its going up, once you get on the object you’re looking at a smaller volume of space,” said Dale Sponseller, ALTAIR Systems engineer. “Because space is so large, searching a large volume of space is a very time consuming effort. The longer you wait the more difficult it becomes.”

The staff will spend the next few hours interpreting data, received every 10 seconds from the computer. They will try to make the best assessment of what each object is as they track the four objects for size and motion using VHF and UHF wave lengths according to Jeff Smathers, Operations director. The rocket body will most likely be the largest object followed by the sylda and the two payloads.

In the midst of tracking the staff will simultaneously turn an acutely tuned ear on the growler, an audible indicator of the antenna motion. "When the antenna is moving or sluing to the position it needs to be, to enable a satellite track, we can hear the antenna moving and also we can listen for any abnormalities that might indicate a maintenance concern," said Schmidt. "If we do notice anything we'll report it right away."

Exposed to the corrosive elements of weather, the 30-year-old ALTAIR antenna, much of which is the original structure, requires substantial ongoing, preventative maintenance.

"There is almost always chipping and painting and priming going on on any one portion. We usually start at the bottom and work our way up to the top. By the time we are done with the top we start back at the bottom and we go again, said Kenny Leines, Mechanical engineer. "Right now we're in the process of replacing a lot of the bolts that were installed back in the 60s and a lot of them have held up great."

The operators for the lifts, the chippers, the painters and carpenters come from a centralized workforce that supports all of KREMS.

To perform these hazardous duties work crews are harnessed to the 150-foot diameter antenna. "For the antenna, the greatest danger is working at heights. All antenna workers must be climber II certified—meaning they are tied off 100 percent with approved fall protection equipment," said Keith Peacock, ALTAIR sensor leader. "Transmitter personnel work around high voltage equipment in excess of 40,000 volts and sources of both ionizing and non-ionizing radiation. Working at ALTAIR exposes people to most of the hazards present on Kwajalein."

"We would never take for granted all the work that it takes to keep these sensors up and running and mission ready," said Schmidt.

In addition to chipping and painting the antenna undergoes constant greasing and lubrication. Weekly maintenance could involve checking the motor, the brakes, and the cooling system, aligning the wheels that ride the rails, and inspecting the rails for wear.

"It's an impressive machine. You see it moving at full speed and see its capabilities, it's impressive from a mechanical stand point, also from a radio frequency stand point its quite impressive as well," said Leines.

In space, objects are either launched or coming back down to earth. SOPS will track these falling or decayed objects in its early stages when they are still out in deep-space and "always when they are getting ready to burn in, because that's a very high interest to Cheyenne Mountain" according to Schmidt.

"What they want to do is have a real accurate prediction of when and where that object is going to burn in," said Schmidt. "They want to know, is it splashing down into the ocean, ok. Is it coming down over Australia, like Skylab, not ok. Part of Cheyenne Mountain's job is to provide warning if there is going to be any objects capable of surviving the reentry, or any kind of potential catastrophe."

Not every thing that goes up comes down. Aside from tracking launches, orbiting satellites and decaying space objects, SOPS will also track space junk. The debris still in orbit can range from a spent rocket body to an astronaut's glove. The space command began cataloging objects in 1957 when the Soviet Union launched Sputnik, which is item number one. The catalog lists over 29,000 objects; more than 8,000 are still orbiting in space. According to Schmidt, the lowest number object on the database still in space for the last 48 years is object number five, the U.S. Vanguard One payload, launched in 1958. "If it is unaffected in a perfect circular orbit it could, theoretically, stay there for decades," said Schmidt.

By the end of 2006 the space surveillance center will move to Building 1010 on Kwajalein. The $167,000 relocation project "will combine space surveillance operation, space object identification operations, and analyst and engineer support in one central location," said Kevin Ehart, SOPS Relocation Project manager. This move to Kwajalein will be a test drive in preparation for the evolutionary step to RTS mission operations stateside said Ehart.

Regardless of where the space surveillance center is located "the role of SOPS has been expanding and will continue to do so," said Ehart, "since more and more satellites and other equipment will be launched into space in the future."

A safer place to ride

Kwajalein Police hope to have school-age guards in place at school crossings soon

By Nell Drumheller
Editor

During the summer the roads on Kwajalein are relatively quiet. Cyclists, unless they are leaving a location where alcoholic beverages have been served, are typically sedate. But now that school is back in session all of that has changed.

There are dozens of little back-packing carrying, adrenaline charged munchkins on the road. It seems as if they are all doing time trials for Tour de France as they zip around one another and dash either to or from school.

Officers from the Kwajalein Police Department are trying to keep the free-for-all to a minimum. An officer is posted from 11:20 to 11:35 a.m. and 3:15 to 3:35 p.m. each school day near the elementary school at 4th and Lagoon.

The officer is there to "Monitor and direct vehicle and bicycle traffic," according to KPD's Lt. Jamison AJ Gilbert.

Gilbert is optimistic that school-age crossing guards will be in place soon to help with the crowd control. "When the School Crossing Guards start we will assist the students in directing traffic," he said. "In the past, we have helped to train the crossing guards along with members of KRS [Kwajalein Range Services] Safety. We would love to have some parents take an interest in assisting with the crossing guards. By involving more parents and adults with the kids, we will show the care and concern we have for their safety. If we demonstrate a community commitment to the program and safety during the 'Kwaj Rush Hour' the students and community will be a safer place to ride our bicycles."

In the meantime, cyclists are advised to "Be aware of children that are still new to riding their bicycles and at times riding them by themselves, without a parent, for the first time," Gilbert, who is the officer in charge of the central police station, said. "Please use hand signals so that other riders and vehicles know your intentions. Parents should remind young riders of the route to take home or to their final destination to ensure they do not get lost or 'side-tracked' to do other activities.

"I know of only two cases of an accident or injury in the last two years," Gilbert said. "In both occasions an inattentive or new bicycle rider played a big role in the incident."

Parents can teach their children how to ride their bicycles defensively. Gilbert said children should know, "Do not assume a car or truck will stop for you. You must obey the road signs just as if you were a motor vehicle. If you have a stop or yield sign, you must stop or yield to the traffic. Use your proper hand signals, so other riders and vehicles know your intentions.

One of the leading problems on Kwajalein is the belief that this is just Kwaj," Gilbert said. "You never know when something could happen. But just as when I used to help teach in the schools with different police and community programs, I like to point out that more people are injured or killed with a 2,000 pound "bullet" a.k.a. a car, then by a real gun bullet. Drive defensively, drive with care, and help keep our kids safe."

He added, "It is always a good idea to ride your bike safely. Having your kids wear bicycle helmets, be aware of where your kids are and are going, and demonstrate to our young people, that we as adults will operate our bicycles in a safe manner, using hand signals and obeying all of the traffic signs."

Young people can learn more about bike safety at Sunday's bike rodeo. The event will be from 5:30 to 6:30 p.m. on 7th Street near Macy's.

Mission Impossible III The third entry in Tom Cruise's Mission: Impossible film series involves super Impossible Mission Forces agent Ethan Hunt (Cruise) being forced back into the field just when he was planning on marrying his girlfriend, Julia (Michelle Monaghan). The agency asks Hunt to save an operative (Keri Russell) he trained after weapons dealer Owen Davian (Philip Seymour Hoffman) kidnaps her. With the help of his field team — played by Ving Rhames, Jonathan Rhys-Meyers, and Maggie Q — Hunt achieves his goal, but becomes involved in a web of double-crosses that leave him wondering if he can trust his superiors

Just My Luck Two people discover just how true the old adage "lucky in life, unlucky in love" can be in this romantic comedy. Ashley (Lindsay Lohan) has always been the sort of girl fortune smiles upon — she's pretty, she has a great job, she had good friends, guys fall over themselves to ask her out, and she never has trouble getting a cab. Jake (Chris Pine), on the other hand, is not nearly so lucky — he's clumsy and accident prone, things never seem to go his way, and he's just lost his job at a bowling alley. However, these two opposites meet one night at a ritzy masquerade ball, and Ashley and Jake exchange an impulsive kiss as two shooting stars cross in the sky. Suddenly, they both find their luck taking a one hundred and eighty degree turn.

Stick It A cocky teenager learns some important lessons about playing by her own rules in this comedy drama. Haley Graham (Missy Peregrym) is a gifted 17-year-old gymnast with a strong rebellious streak — strong enough that she walked away from her teammates on the eve of a major international tournament because she'd had enough of the rigid regimentation of Team U.S.A. After experiencing a scrape with the law with her extreme-cycling friends, Haley is given an unusual sentence — attending the Vickerman Gymnastics Academy, a world-class training facility run by Burt Vickerman (Jeff Bridges), who has led some of the world's greatest gymnasts to championship status.
