

THE KWAJALEIN HOURGLASS

Captain Louis S. Zamperini "Be Hardy!"

A standout athlete Louis Zamperini at age 19 was the youngest distance runner on the 1936 U.S. Olympic Track Team. He subsequently established national and world collegiate records for the mile run while a student at the University of Southern California.

Drafted in 1941, 2LT Zamperini trained as a B-24D bombardier with the Army Air Forces, transferring to Hawaii in November 1942. On 27 May 1943, having survived raids on Wake Island, Makin, and Nauru, and the Japanese attack on Funafuti, the "Green Hornet" crew volunteered for a rescue mission off the coast of Palmyra. As engines failed, the plane crashed into the Pacific. Of the 11 men on board, only three survived the crash: 1LT Zamperini, pilot 1LT Russell Phillips, and tail gunner SGT Francis McNamara. McNamara died at sea, but Zamperini and Phillips survived 47 days on the open ocean despite storms, shark attacks and enemy strafing. Drifting 2,000 miles, they landed in the Marshall Islands on 15 July. Transported to Kwajalein, then known as "Execution Island," Zamperini was detained in the cell which had held the nine Marine Raiders captured on Makin. "Zamp" and "Phil" survived 42 days on Kwajalein before being moved to a secret interrogation center and Prisoner of War camps in Japan where they were tortured and enslaved. They remained POWs until the end of the war – August 1945.

Suffering from severe PTSD, Zamperini found a route to recovery and a new calling through the sermons of Rev. Billy Graham. Zamperini has toured the world speaking of his wartime experiences and the powers of hope and forgiveness. In his words and actions, Louis Zamperini continues to be an inspiration for us all.

In Remembrance...

Chief Master Sgt. Buddy Wagoner, Ret., 70, passed away on Jan. 5, at Queens Medical Center in Honolulu. He was born Nov. 28, 1942 in Nashville, Tenn. Wagoner worked for the Department of the Army Honolulu Field

Office for U.S. Army Kwajalein Atoll as a transportation specialist for 26 years.

Buddy lived in Hawaii with his family for almost 30 years after having been transferred to Hickam Air Force Base during his service in the U.S. Air Force. After completing school at Howard High School in Nashville, Tenn., Wagoner entered the U.S. Air Force and served 26 years, 4 months and 11 days until his retirement in Hawaii. During his service, he became a disabled veteran of the Vietnam War. He served his country for another 26 years as a civilian.

Buddy will be fondly remembered by his family and his USAKA colleagues for his humor, his smile and for his devotion to his country. He is survived by wife of 40 years, Arunee; sons, Robert, Apisit, and Johnathan; daughters, Lori Hamilton and Tammy Sinor; sister, Janelle Dahlstrom; daughters-in-law, Michelle and Catherine; and grandchildren. In lieu of flowers, his family is requesting that you consider making a donation in Buddy's name to his favorite charity, the St. Jude Children's Research Hospital. Family would love to hear from you at <http://BuddyWagoner.us>.

USAKA, RTS staff honored at town hall

Lt. Gen. Richard Formica, Commanding General, U.S. Space and Missile Defense Command/Army Forces Strategic Command, speaks at the town hall Wednesday. He gave out awards to USAKA and RTS staff and updated personnel on happenings Army-wide and at the U.S. Strategic Command level.

U.S. Army Kwajalein Atoll and Reagan Test Site had a big year in 2012. There was the successful test of FTI-01, the Agent for Certification Authority inspection and everyday duties fulfilled by Soldiers and Department of the Army civilians. At a town hall Wednesday, those hardworking personnel were recognized and thanked by Lt. Gen. Richard Formica, Commanding General, U.S. Space and Missile Defense Command/Army Forces Strategic Command.

Formica gave out several awards and spoke to the Soldiers, DA civilians and contractors about what's going on Army-wide and also at the U.S. Strategic Command level.

Formica discussed several topics, including: campaign plan implementation, regional alignment, Army Capstone Concept, sequestration, North Korean missile launch in December 2012, OPOD 13-01 and the Regional Satellite Security Center realignment, and SkiWeb, an information sharing tool for the command.

Command Sgt. Maj. Turner also addressed the audience. "Across this command, we do an outstanding job with safety." He asked that everyone continue to be aware of safety issues and report an unsafe actions so they can be corrected. He encouraged anyone at USAKA and RTS to submit articles or achievement to be recognized in the Eagle electronic newsletter, on the SMDC/ARSTRAT website. It's a great source to see what's going on across the command. Master resilience training is open for military and civilians. This training is tied to suicide prevention and sexual harassment. There were zero of either incident at USAKA and RTS last year.

Questions and comments were taken by Formica, including the ongoing transition of base ops to IMCOM, the need for Army systems to address its personally identifiable information, budget constraints concerning travel and the uncertainty of the Army's budget.

Awards & Achievements

Lt. Gen Formica handed out a variety of awards to USAKA and RTS personnel including service for FTI-01, the ACA Inspection and personal achievements. The team supported the largest, most complex missile defense flight test ever, controlled test operations from the Reagan Test Site Operations Center – Huntsville, and provided sensors and data collection from USAKA and RTS.

Louis S. Zamperini

A stand out athlete at Torrance High School in California, Zamperini was selected for the 1936 U.S. Olympic track team at 19. While preparing for his next Olympics, Zamperini went on to set records for the mile while a student at the University of Southern California. Drafted in 1941, 2nd Lt. Louis Zamperini trained as a bombardier with the Army Air Forces. Assigned to a B-24D, Zamperini and his crew transferred to Hawaii in November 1942. Having survived raids on Wake Island, Makin, and Nauru, and the Japanese attack on Funafuti, on May 27, 1943, he and his crew volunteered for a rescue mission off the coast of Palmyra. As a result of engine failure, the plane crashed into the Pacific. Of the 11 men on board, only three survived the crash: 1st Lt. Zamperini, his friend and pilot 1st Lt. Russell Phillips and tail gunner Sgt. Francis McNamara. At a time when most downed men were never found, Zamperini and Phillips survived 47 days afloat in the open Pacific. They drifted 2,000 miles landing in the Marshall Islands on July 15. Transferred to Kwajalein, or "Execution Island," Zamperini was held in the cell which previously held the nine Marine Raiders captured on Makin. "Zamp" and "Phil" survived 42 days of interrogations before being moved to Ofuna, a secret interrogation center in Japan and later Prisoner of War camps where they were tortured and enslaved. They remained prisoners until the end of the war - August 1945.

Suffering from severe Post Traumatic Stress Disorder, Zamperini found a route to recovery and a new calling through the sermons by Rev. Billy Graham. After visiting Japan as a missionary, Zamperini met with and forgave his former guards. In the 1950s, he established the Victory Boys Camp, to provide guidance and support to disadvantaged boys and has helped to establish similar programs around the world. Zamperini also retained a connection to Kwajalein, returning to help investigators try to locate the remains of the Makin Raiders. Zamperini has toured the world speaking of his wartime experiences and the powers of hope and forgiveness. In his words and actions, Louis Zamperini continues to be an inspiration for us all.

Louis S. Zamperini's story is one of service, sacrifice, perseverance and forgiveness, said Commanding General, U.S. Space and Missile Defense Command/Army Forces Strategic Command, Lt. Gen. Richard Formica, Wednesday at the dining facility dedication at U.S. Army Kwajalein Atoll. Formica was the presiding official at the ceremony, which renamed Café Pacific the "Captain Louis S. Zamperini Dining Facility."

For a moment in time, Zamperini's life connected right here with Kwajalein. He survived 47 days drifting in the Pacific Ocean, followed by 42 days of intense interrogations on Kwajalein, which was known then as "Execution Island." He then survived two years as a Japanese Prisoner of War. The dining facility on Kwajalein will not be the first place named for Zamperini.

"Today, at U.S. Army Kwajalein Atoll, we will add another place to the list of locations bearing his name," Formica said during his address. "Our intent is to inspire current and future generations of Soldiers and civilians who serve here at Kwajalein with the spirit of service, sacrifice, perseverance, commitment and character embodied by Captain Louis Zamperini."

Kwajalein residents and distinguished guests gathered in front of the dining facility Wednesday for the unveiling of the new building sign and Zamperini plaque and mural placed inside. Distinguished visitors included: Republic of the Marshall Islands President Christopher Loeak; RMI First Lady, Lieoem Anono Loeak; Minister in Assistance to the President, Tony deBrum; Foreign Minister of the RMI, Phillip Muller, and his wife, Yolanda; Kwajalein Senators Michael Kabua and Jeban Riklon; Chief Secretary Casten Nemra; and U.S. Ambassador to the RMI, Thomas Armbruster.

Muller was the first guest speaker of the day. "President Loeak and his delegation are delighted to join you here today," he began. "It is people like the man that we honor today ... who gives us hope for when things get tough. ... The dedication and naming of this facility after this heroic man is most fitting and proper.” Muller recognized all the men and women who have served their countries and, like Zamperini, are courageous and selfless. “Perhaps I may suggest that ... in the future, if there is a chance, that the command can work with the RMI government to name and dedicate one of the facilities after a Marshallese of similar distinction, especially the brave ancestors of our irojjes today.” Muller closed by saying, “I know that the friendship and close relationship between our two governments and peoples remains strong and will endure long into the future. The RMI is proud to be a partner in this mutual defense cooperation. We will continue to value this special relationship.” The RMI government recessed their parliament in order to make the trip to Kwajalein for the dedication and to visit with Formica.

Armbruster spoke next, highlighting the similarities between Zamperini’s character and the Marshallese. “We’re here to celebrate an American hero. ... The qualities we admire in Louis Zamperini – determination, resilience, resourcefulness – are also qualities that have allowed the Marshallese people to thrive on these narrow strips of land.” It appealed to Armbruster to be able to share the story of Zamperini with Marshallese friends who understand the perils of the sea and what it means to never give up. “World War II taught us that there is no isolation from the world. ... The Marshalls are considered remote, but there was no escape from the war.” In the end, that’s what Louis Zamperini’s example teaches us, Armbruster said. “There are no insurmountable problems. If he can become an Olympic athlete, survive brutal captivity and survive at sea, what problem, what challenges are too big for us? None.”

Formica closed the ceremony by recounting Zamperini’s life tale and how he was able to overcome, despite dismal odds.

The plaque, sign and mural were unveiled for the community and visitors to see. Formica visited Zamperini and his family on Friday and delivered a DVD of the dedication ceremony.

RMI President visits Kwajalein Schools

Article and photos by Sheila Gideon
Managing Editor

Christopher Loeak was the president of his class in high school. In that role, he visited Kwajalein many years ago. On Wednesday, Loeak returned to Kwajalein, this time as the president of the Republic of the Marshall Islands. Loeak visited Kwajalein Schools Wednesday with Lt. Gen. Richard Formica, Commanding General, U.S. Space and Missile Defense Command/Army Forces Strategic Command, and the U.S. Army Kwajalein Atoll command. During Loeak's first visit, it is doubtful that many knew his name; however, this time, many Marshallese children who attend the Ri'katak program at Kwajalein Schools not only knew his name, but knew he is the RMI president, and could point him out in the room.

Kwajalein Schools Superintendent, Al Robinson, toured the command group around the two campuses Wednesday to give them an idea of what Kwajalein schools offer, and a look into the Ri'katak program. There are 52 Ri'katak students at Kwajalein Schools. Every year, three students are integrated and work their way up through the system. There are 250 students at Kwajalein Schools, so Ri'katak students make up about 20 percent of the student population. Robinson boasted about the past successful Ri'katak students who have graduated and moved on to distinguished colleges or entered into the military.

At George Seitz Elementary School, they visited Jennifer Cossey's kindergarten class, Cher Kirk's third-grade class and Anne Jahnke's fifth-grade class. They then toured the high school campus and talked to teen students there. At the third-grade class, Ri'katak student Verlene Lorok knew the RMI president's name, but not what he looked like. She was surprised when he was standing right behind her. At the fifth-grade class, Ri'katak student David Kabua knew Loeak's name and was even able to point him out in the room. At the kindergarten class, Ri'katak student Kevin Drebon got to shake Loeak's hand.

Loeak addressed the students. "American and Marshallese students studying together is very valuable and a good experience. To the students from Ebeye, I'm very proud of you." He told them they are lucky and very fortunate to go to school on Kwajalein. "I wish I had the opportunity when I was growing up on Ebeye. Be good students and be good neighbors to your fellow students." Before he departed, he said, "I will be thinking of you. I am proud of what you are doing here."

Formica asked the students several questions about what they liked best about living on Kwajalein and what some of the challenges are. "Like the (RMI) president, I'm very proud of the relationship we have at this school to educate American and Marshallese students side by side and together," Formica said. He told the students that one day they'll look back at their time here and appreciate the opportunity to learn with students from a different country. "This is a big deal to have president Loeak here to come and see you." When they are older, Formica said they will remember meeting a president of a country; not a lot of kids get that experience.

U.S. Ambassador to the RMI, Thomas Armbruster, asked the kids what they want to be when they grow up. Fifth-grade answers included a lawyer, paleontologist, marine photographer, football players, soldier and teacher. "You've got great teachers and you're off to a great start. Good luck," said Armbruster.

Unbound Bookmaker Project: giving Marshallese kids a voice

Article and photos by Sheila Gideon

Marshallese children have been given a voice thanks to the Unbound Bookmaker Project, an editing company based out of Majuro, Republic of the Marshall Islands. The Unbound Bookmaker was founded by Jamie Zvirzdin. Her husband, Andrew, works in Majuro as the Political, Economic and Consular Officer. Zvirzdin visited Kwajalein and Ebeye this weekend to greet students who may help write and illustrate the next Unbound book.

"The Unbound Bookmaker Project happened when I saw that there were very few Marshallese children's books," Zvirzdin explained. "I wanted to use the skills that we have at the Unbound Bookmaker and make new Marshallese/English children's books." People submit their books to Unbound Bookmaker, who then typeset, edit and design them. Then the books are sent off to be printed. The end result is a real book made by Marshallese students that can be purchased all over the world, via Amazon. "Anyone in the world can buy this book now," Zvirzdin said. "It's pretty exciting that we can reach a lot more people who are not living in Majuro."

On Monday afternoon, Zvirzdin met with the Kwajalein 4-H Citizenship Club to explain how the Unbound Bookmaker Project was started and how it works.

Zvirzdin collaborates with Marshallese students and teaches them the necessary writing and creative skills to contribute to a book. The first book published, "The Important Book - Majuro," was written by a fourth-grade class at a co-op school in Majuro.

"Provided we can get the funding for it, we'd love to do a similar book about Ebeye," Zvirzdin told them.

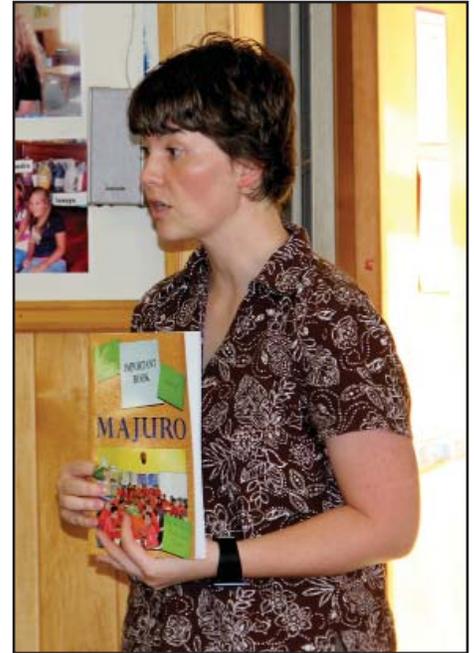

There have been three books published so far, all in English. "Taki and His Boat," a book about marine safety, was written by students from Guegegue. While on Ebeye, Zvirzdin actually got to meet "Taki" from the book.

There is a plan to publish 12 more books; these will be in both English and Marshallese. The RMI Ministry of Education plans to put a complete set of the books at every school in the Marshall Islands.

"The best way to educate is to get them excited," Zvirzdin said. Instead of trying to teach Marshallese children using books about trains, mountains and caves, she thinks teaching them with material they know about, like the islands around them, will work better. "Marshallese teaching other Marshallese really appeals to me."

Zvirzdin encouraged the students to keep working hard at school. "Keep writing and reading and if you want to be an author, go for it." Zvirzdin recommended the students get a journal and try to write at least 300 words a day to exercise their creative minds. "Who knows, maybe you'll want to be an author when you grow up and make your own books."

Jamie Zvirzdin, founder of the Unbound Bookmaker Project, visits the 4-H group at the Teen Center on Kwajalein, telling them how the program was started.

Hoop dreams come true

Former NBA coach Tom Newell visits, holds clinics on Kwajalein, Ebeye

Basketball fanatics on Kwajalein and Ebeye were treated to a visit from former NBA coach Tom Newell last week. Newell was an assistant coach with the Seattle SuperSonics, New Jersey Nets and the Dallas Mavericks. His visit to the Republic of the Marshall Islands was sponsored by the U.S. State Department's Sports Ambassador program. Newell's first stop was in Majuro from Jan. 3-10. He offered coaches and players clinics on Ebeye Jan. 11-12. His visit culminated with a player's clinic on Kwajalein Monday morning, followed by friendly neighborhood games that afternoon.

On Jan. 10, Newell took a trip to Ebeye with U.S. Ambassador to the RMI, Thomas Armbruster. He received a vehicle tour of the island courtesy of Rebel John. It was an opportunity for him to see Marshallese children play basketball all around the island, using makeshift courts and hoops wherever possible. Their tour ended at the Ebeye Community Center, where Newell held an introductory meeting with the Ebeye coaches.

Armbruster introduced Newell and explained to the coaches that he will help them improve their coaching skills, and teach them what they need to get the kids enthusiastic about the game. He told them that Newell will not only teach them, but will also learn from them.

"My visit out here would not be possible without Ambassador Armbruster," Newell said. The two met in Russia several years ago. They remained friends and when Armbruster became the U.S. Ambassador to the RMI, he brought Newell out knowing how important basketball is to the Marshallese. "It's really important that you embrace his vision to help the RMI," Newell continued. "He sees, he understands, he cares about you. So, by bringing me here, it's his way of saying that he knows [Marshallese kids] love basketball and I can help you help them."

"I have great respect for each of you for what you represent to the children and to the people here on Ebeye," Newell told the coaches. He admires that they give time to be a part of their community. Newell stressed how important it is for the coaches to understand the rules and why officials make the calls they do during a game. "You have a responsibility. You must teach first and coach second," he said.

Throughout the next two days, Newell worked with the coaches to understand the fundamentals and rules of the game. He then held clinics for the kids, teaching them rules to help right their bad habits.

Back on Kwajalein, Newell held a similar clinic for 11-18-year-olds. They spent the morning running drills for passing, dribbling and shooting.

In the afternoon, games were held to show off the skills learned at the clinics. The 11-14-year-old Kwajalein kids played 5-on-5 against one another. Newell coached one team, while Armbruster and his son, Bryan, coached the other. At the buzzer for double overtime, Khalil Griffin scored the winning basket for Newell's team.

For the older kids' game, friends from the Ebeye clinics came over to play. The Kwajalein team stayed comfortably ahead until the last few minutes of the second half. With less than two minutes to go, the Ebeye team jumped to within a few points. It came down to the last seconds, and the Kwajalein team squeaked by with a 43-42 victory.

"You did a good job and should be very proud," Newell told all the players at the end of the game. They all put their hands in and gave a big, "Booyea" cheer, his favorite phrase when his players do something great.
