Tax filing extension deadline for overseas residents is June 15

By Kent Duncan
USAKA/KMR Legal Office

The automatic two-month extension deadline for overseas citizens of the United States, including Kwajalein and Roi-Namur residents, is June 15.

For those residents who have not filed, it is recommended that they get started. To obtain the automatic extension, just write "overseas filer" on the front of the tax form.

Those who owe money to the IRS or their home state are reminded that interest started accruing April 18. It is in their best interest to file and pay that as soon as possible. Those who do not owe anything, file by June 15. To file a federal paper return from Kwajalein, send it to the Philadelphia Reserve Service Center, Philadelphia, Penn., 19255-0215.

Residents who arrived on Kwajalein after June 15, 1999, and want to take the Foreign Earned Income Exclusion can request an extension of up to six months (Oct. 15) by using Form 2350. Filers must indicate that they are requesting the extension for purposes of obtaining the Foreign Earned Income Exclusion. If they arrived late in the year, they can file now without the exclusion and later file a Schedule X, Amended Return, to claim the exclusion.

Help is available in preparing a tax return. A number of residents have volunteered to help under the Volunteer Income Tax Assistance (VITA) program without charge. Their names and phone numbers appear at the end of this article.

VITA volunteers can also assist with 1999 state income tax preparation. In addition, many state materials are on the Internet. The general

Remembering heroes

Officials stand at attention as the Kwajalein Jr./Sr. High School Band plays "The Star-Spangled Banner" during a Memorial Day ceremony Monday. Residents gathered at the flagpole to honor the men and women of the armed forces who died in service to the United States. For complete Memorial Day coverage, see Friday's Hourglass.

Movie projectors spread thin

By Peter Rejcek

Now showing: An intermission break at the Yokwe Yuk and Tradewinds movie theaters.

A shortage of working movie projectors has left the theaters with only one projector each for showing feature films, which come on two or three reels, depending on length. That means there is now about a five-minute delay in the action while the reels are switched, as opposed to a more seamless transition from one projector to another when two are operating.

"The films will still play, it will just take a few [more] minutes," said Steve Snider, superintendent of Entertainment Services. "We're asking for the public's patience."

Snider explained that when the second projector at the Tradewinds Theater on Roi-Namur recently broke down, one of the two machines at the Yuk Theater was loaned out so Roi residents would not be without big-screen entertainment. Only the Richardson Theater — which plays more movies every weekend, including double features on Sunday nights — has two working movie projectors.

"Community Activities is researching several options to resolve this temporary situation and will bring the projectors on-line as soon as possible," said Simone Smead, Community Activities manager. "The community's understanding of this situation is greatly appreciated."

The play's the thing

In other entertainment news, who needs a movie projector when live theater is available? Armed Forces Entertainment will present Pinpoint Theater Group's production, "The Meeting," on June 11.

The award-winning play turns on a hypothetical twist of history: What would have happened if Malcolm X and Martin Luther King Jr. had met before they were gunned down, just three years apart? The drama explores the lives, philosophies, and times of these two controversial figures of the Civil Rights era.

The one-night only performance will be held at 8 p.m. in the MP room. According to Snider, special arrangements will be made to accommodate Roi residents on that Sunday evening.

Range operation set for Thursday

From the Command Safety Office

A range operation is scheduled for Thursday, June 1. Caution times are 7:01 p.m. Thursday to 4:01 a.m. Friday, June 2.

In conjunction with this operation, a caution area will exist within Kwajalein Atoll, defined by the area bounded on the north by Boked Island on the east reef and Yabbernohr Island on the west reef, and bounded on the south by a line drawn north of Bigej Island on the east reef to a point at latitude 08 54.2N, longitude 167 45.8E, then to a point at latitude 08 52.8N, longitude 167 45.8E, and then to a point north of the high tide mark on Ninni Island on the west reef.

Bigej Island, including the inner reef, is specifically excluded and is not a part of the mid-atoll corridor. All mid-atoll corridor islands are designated as sheltered islands.

See maps in last Friday's Hourglass for more details.

In the event of a mission slip, the caution times and areas will be in effect for the following days:

- 7:01 p.m. Friday, June 2, through 4:01 a.m. Saturday, June 3.

- 7:01 p.m. Saturday, June 3, through 4:01 a.m. Sunday, June 4.

Questions regarding the safety requirements for this mission should be directed to the Command Safety Office, range safety officer, 51910.

Never too early to think about next year's taxes ...

Website is www.tax.state.???.us. Fill in the question marks with the two-letter abbreviation for the state in question, such as "ma" for Massachusetts or "az" for Arizona. On-line forms, instructions, and perhaps a way to file on-line are available at the site.

For those who have already filed their taxes this year, here are some future tax planning tips:

- Plan now for next year. For example, ensure an employer is withholding enough taxes during the year.

- Take maximum advantage of a 401(k) plan. Investors earn interest or accrue value in a stock plan. Also, an employer will match some or all of an employee's contributions, which reduces taxable income.

- Think long-term. If planning to sell securities, wait for at least 12 months to take advantage of long-term tax rates, which are lower than short-term tax rates. This includes mutual funds.

- Educational credit. If possible, pay for a child's tuition and fees at college. Taxpayers may be able to qualify for a one-for-one tax credit up to $1,500 per student, reducing the tax bill dollar-for-dollar.

- Personal debt enjoys no tax advantage. Mortgage debt is deductible.

- Home ownership. Home owners who are thinking about selling in the next few years should try living there for two out of the last five years before selling. This will qualify them for the $250,000 per spouse exclusion.

Job Corps field trips highlight career options

By Bob Fore

Tim Bobo, painter at the Automotive Department, credits much of his success to his Job Corps training. He has done so well that recently he was promoted from auto body repair.

"I wanted to be a mechanic or welder in high school, but out here we don't have that kind of training opportunity," Bobo said. "That is why I chose the Job Corps. The training I received was what I needed to accomplish what I want with my life."

To help other Kwajalein Job Corps students choose their training field, program instructors have been conducting field trips to different departments around the island over the last four weeks.

The students are told of the many career choices open to them and receive instruction in English, mathematics, productivity, and following directions. After three months of general studies on Kwajalein, they transfer to Job Corps centers in Hawaii or the mainland for the actual training in the career field of their choice.

"The sites we have visited have been very helpful in explaining the types of work [departments] do and what is involved in the job," said Ruby Butterworth, Kwajalein Job Corps site manager. "Often, the students have never had the chance to experience these kinds of jobs."

The students have visited the Finance, Marine, Automotive, and FOM departments, as well as the Yokwe Yuk Club, Café Pacific, and Information Technology.

At the Yuk Club, the students were shown the many duties involved in preparation for a special function. The two major areas covered were the dining room duties and kitchen operations. They were also allowed time to walk around freely and ask questions of anyone they wanted.

"The students visited on the day we were preparing the World Prayer luncheon, so they had the opportunity to see a three-course meal in preparation," said Bob Baker, Yokwe Yuk executive chef. "I asked at the beginning of the tour how many of the students had ever been in a production kitchen, and none had. I think they found it very interesting, judging by the many questions they asked."

At Information Technology, Jason Fuller, PC network support supervisor, took the students on a tour of the facility, including the computer room and operations center. He also explained about troubleshooting and repair of computers, as well as the qualifications and expectations for employees of that section.

There are 67 Job Corps graduates employed by Raytheon/Range Systems Engineering in support of USAKA/KMR, the RMI's largest employer.

"The Job Corps and the College of the Marshall Islands are two of our most important sources for qualified applicants for available job openings here at Raytheon," said Jack Riordan, Human Resources director of RMI employee relations. "We are very pleased with the quality of students from both of these sources.

"Job Corps training provides a good sign of the quality and dedication the new employee will be bringing to the workplace," Riordan said. "They have a good working knowledge of English and understand what is required of them in a new job."

U.S. Army Central Identification Laboratory, Hawaii, deploys search and recover teams year-round*Worldwide search continues for missing U.S. service members

By Pat Cataldo

It is a startling statistic that 78,000 American servicemen from World War II are still unaccounted for, as are 8,100 from the Korean conflict — including 5,500 in North Korea — and 2,100 from the Vietnam War.

Bringing those numbers down is the mission of a field-operating element of the U.S. Total Army Personnel Command called CILHI, short for U.S. Army Central Identification Laboratory, Hawaii.

Staffed with about 170 military and civilian personnel, CILHI has a worldwide mission to search for, recover, and identify remains of American military personnel and certain American civilian and allied personnel.

In addition, CILHI professionals perform humanitarian missions as directed by the Department of the Army. These include assisting with recovering remains in airplane crashes. The lab also offers worldwide emergency support.

On a recent mission, a CILHI team was at Butaritari Island, Makin Atoll, in the Gilbert Islands as 1999 was drawing to a close. They were searching for the burial site of 18 Marine Raiders of the famous 2nd Marine Raider Battalion, who had been killed in a World War II raid nearly six decades earlier. The Raiders' commanding officer, Lt. Col. Evans Carlson, reported he had paid an islander to bury the men.

Elderly Gilbertese who had witnessed the burial helped locate the site. As the excavation proceeded, team members realized they had found more than they expected. Instead of 18 sets of remains, they uncovered 20 — perhaps even 21 — complete sets, plus other remains from earlier burials, probably islanders. Who were the other men?

World's largest forensic laboratory

The remains were repatriated at Hickam Air Force Base, Hawaii, in December last year, and taken to the CILHI facility at the base. There, in the world's largest forensic laboratory, experts patiently record the details they expect will result in identification of most, if not all, of the remains.

"I personally think we will be able to identify all but two or three of the sets of remains," said William R. Belcher, Ph.D., a forensic anthropologist at CILHI. He was recovery team leader on an earlier search at Butaritari, and now is coordinating the work on the Makin Atoll case.

"I believe there will be no more than two or three [remains] that will require family reference DNA samples," he added. "We have very good records on these men."

Local mystery

A local mystery may be closer to solution with identification of the remains. The mystery is, who were the nine Marines beheaded at Kwajalein in October 1942? (See Hourglass issues of March 28, April 4, April 11, and April 18).

It appears certain that the nine were Marine Raiders who had taken part in the raid at Butaritari in August 1942. Inadvertently left behind when their comrades withdrew, they were captured by the Japanese and brought to Kwajalein, where they were executed soon after.

Who was executed?

But 12 men, not nine, were unaccounted for after the raid, in addition to 18 known dead. The Japanese kept no records on their prisoners, and no dog tags or burial site have been located at Kwajalein. It is not known which of the 12 missing men were executed.

If the 19th and 20th men are identified as two of those unaccounted for at Butaritari, it narrows the field.

Largest recovery to date

Twenty or more complete sets of remains in one grave was a record find for CILHI professionals. They are accustomed to recovering remains scattered over wide areas, and dealing with small bits of bone mixed with debris at crash sites. CILHI officials say the recovery at Butaritari represents the largest number of individuals recovered from a single site to date.

Though the Butaritari grave contained a record number of remains, the recovery wasn't that easy. First, it was necessary to remove 50 live grenades, plus weapons and boxes of ammunition that had been buried with the bodies.

22 dog tags found with the bodies

Also with the remains were 22 dog tags representing 11 individuals. That could be helpful. But one person had three tags. Because the bodies had been laid across and atop each other, the dog tags could have shifted since the time of the original burial.

At the CILHI lab, the remains were first painstakingly cleaned in a two-month-long process. Then an anthropologist and an odontologist (specialist in teeth and jaw bones, their size, shape, and diseases) began a careful examination.

While DNA is highly touted as the key to unlocking mysteries of identification, it is odontology and dental radiographic comparison that continue to have the highest success rate in identifying World War II remains, Belcher said.

DNA samples are not on file for servicemen of the second World War,

CILHI forensic anthropologist William R. Belcher believes that all but two or three remains from Makin will be identified.

CILHI has the world's largest forensic laboratory at its facility at Hickam Air Force Base in Honolulu. There, all remains are examined by forensic anthropologists and odontologists, whose findings are compared with records in the CILHI archive.

and, as the years pass, surviving relatives are increasingly difficult to find. But every American service member had a dental history on file, although some of the medical and dental records have been lost, especially in a fire in 1973 at the records repository in St. Louis, Mo.

Other reliable clues can be found in photographs of grinning young men at duty stations or on leave, when they show the relative size of teeth and jaw bones. For this reason, the U.S. Marine Raider Association sought snapshots of the Butaritari Raiders killed and unaccounted for and furnished them to CILHI.

Every clue, every detail is important. "We've got to be absolutely sure we know who this person is," said Maj. Andrew Irwin, CILHI executive officer. "We can't compromise quality or scientific principles."

Irwin has worked two sides of the problem at CILHI. He spent two years as a search and recovery team commander and now is serving a year at the Honolulu facility as executive officer.

Searches go on worldwide

The team that recovered the remains at Butaritari is one of 13 such teams that travel the world conducting surveys and excavations of crash and burial sites associated with missing American military personnel.

Five times a year, recovery teams go to Europe, China, and Papua New Guinea, among other locations, to search for remains of World War II servicemembers. With the collapse of the Soviet Union, CILHI also has access to sites involving Cold War losses.

Six joint North Korean-American recovery operations were held in North Korea in 1999, up from one in 1996, the year such deployments were first negotiated. This year, CILHI hopes to send two teams on each deployment.

Since 1992, much of CILHI's effort has been focused on recovery of Vietnam War remains in Vietnam, Laos, and Cambodia. Missions to Southeast Asia take place five or six times a year, with six teams going to Vietnam and three to Laos. Usually, a team goes to Cambodia twice a year.

The team that lo-

CILHI Casualty Data Analysis archive contains personnel, medical, and dental files on deceased U.S. service members whose remains have not been recovered and identified. This includes more than 78,000 from World War II, more than 8,100 from the Korean War, and about 2,100 from Southeast Asia.

cated the grave on Butaritari in December had been deployed to Vietnam, but floods halted work there, so the team was reassigned to Makin Atoll.

Teams work in challenging conditions

Other recoveries are conducted worldwide, as resources allow. Sites have included Australia, Russia, Tibet, China, Germany, the Netherlands, England, France, Czech Republic, South Korea, Vanuatu, and many other islands in the South Pacific.

CILHI teams routinely spend more than 200 days a year in some of the most challenging areas of the world, from the frozen mountains of Tibet to the jungles of Nicaragua, and from the deserts of the Middle East to the rice paddies of Southeast Asia. Teams remain in the field for 30 to 35 days on each deployment.

It's a demanding schedule, for both team members and their families. But instead of grumbling, Belcher's reaction seems to be the norm: "I love this job," he said emphatically. "I feel I can really make a difference here. It's very satisfying."

Circus visits Ebeye

By Peter Rejcek

Roddy Galvez's wolfish grin promises danger and excitement. It's really no surprise that the Colombian native is the one who rides a motorcycle in a circular cage named the Globe of Death.

Galvez is one of about 24 performers with the Magic Circus of Samoa, which is performing under the big top on Ebeye through Saturday. The first performance was Tuesday.

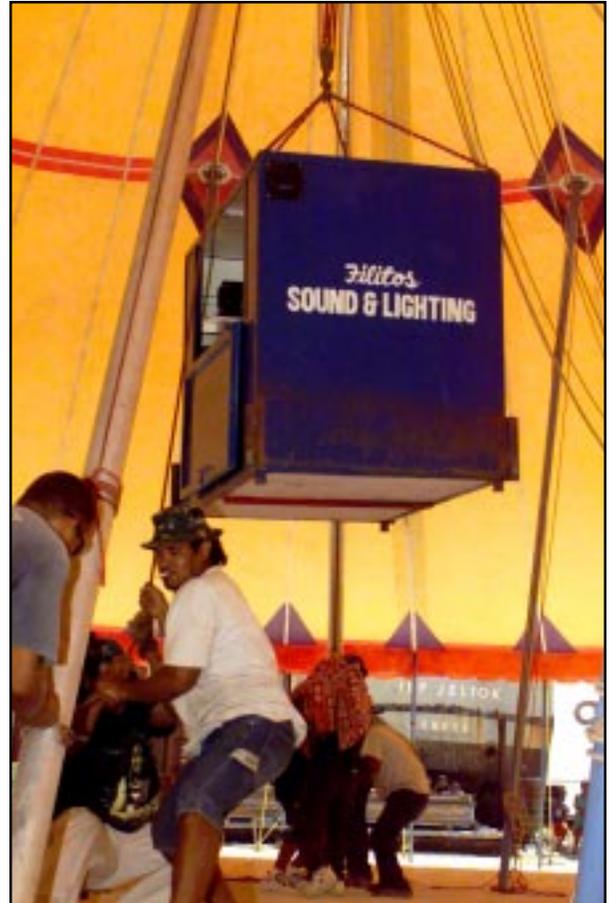

The circus includes clowns, a high-wire act, knife throwing, and Samoan dancers, among a plethora of mind-boggling performances.

Tickets go on sale at 6 p.m. daily. Regular admission is $10 for adults and $5 for children. Ringside tickets are $4 extra per ticket. The circus tent is located just south of the Ebeye pier. The two-hour show begins at 7 p.m.

Top right: A circus performer kneels astride the big top to place the Samoan flag, as preparations were underway last Saturday for this week's performances under the big top on Ebeye.

Right: Circus workers with the Magic Circus of Samoa hoist a light and sound box that will be used to help create a spectacle that promises to amaze children and adults alike.
