New teachers hit Kwaj en masse

KW Hillis

Feature Writer

It took more than two vans to transport the new off-island teachers, their families and two pets from the airport to their new homes on Kwajalein last week.

Impressions of the island were as varied as the backgrounds of the nine off-island hires.

"There were 15 of us and the airplane was full ... [People] had talked about how small the community was.

C.J. Sorensen

There were 150 people crammed into that little terminal," said C.J. Sorensen, Jr./Sr. High School English teacher. "Then there wasn't anybody. The streets were empty."

Sorensen and his new wife,

Rebecca, who will teach at Kwajalein Child Development Center, were married July 29.

Sorensen, who holds a degree from the University of Wisconsin, found out about Kwajalein through the International Teachers Job Fair in Iowa. He said he was very excited about the workshop approach that Kwajalein has.

"We're surprised how big [Kwajalein] is ... I was expecting a small speck of land," said Brandi Brewster, one half of another couple that will join the school system this year.

Brandi and Brian Brewster, who hail from Colorado Springs, were able to spend their Aug. 3 wedding anniversary in Hawaii on their way out to Kwaj.

Curriculum focuses on writing

Asian studies, English course added to classes

Class size at Kwajalein Junior/Senior High School and the elementary school will be smaller this year.

School Superintendent Karen Ammann said that the school system has 48 teachers, up from 46 last year, and about 200 high school students and 270 elementary students, which is a decrease of 29 students. The numbers lead to smaller classes, which is a big benefit for the students and teachers alike, Ammann said.

The theme for the school system this year is, "Writing Across the Curriculum," which will increase writing skills in all classes, whether math, art or English, Ammann said.

"We are looking forward to great results from this increased emphasis on writing," Ammann added.

The class offerings at the high school will change, led by the deletion of study halls, according to Stephen Howell, high school principal.

"It frees up teachers to be able to teach," Howell said. "The time will be used for additional classes and will also cut down on existing class size."

Some of the additional classes will include an advanced woodshop, a new English course and Asian Studies.

The new English class, Practical English, is being offered for 11th and 12th graders who are not going onto college, according to Howell. College prep material is replaced with more practical material, such as how to write resumés and letters of application.

Howell is particularly pleased with the addition of an Asian Studies class, which will have a section on Micronesian history.

Let's talk trash: Not the kind of trash young people talk, like, "whuz up?" but dirty, stinking, rotten trash

I admit that, before my recent move to Kwajalein, I didn't think about where trash actually goes. I do now. Now, I'm seriously aware that the trash on Kwajalein and Roi-Namur does not just fade away, evaporate or disappear to three states away. Ocean dumping and open-pit burning ended long ago.

In this small, three-mile world we live in, our actions have an immediate impact on this island. We generate almost 50,000 pounds of residential, commercial and industrial waste every day.

My staff tells me that Raytheon's Solid Waste Management people have taken some innovative actions over the past year, and with your support, our recycling rates have increased about 35 percent for aluminum cans and 25 percent for glass. I would like to enlist your help to see a 50 percent increase. Why? Because recycling is a cost-effective option with many benefits, both environmental and operational.

Most of our progress is attributed to industrial recycling on Kwajalein and Roi-Namur. And, although the residential sides of the islands are lagging behind, I'm told that even the industrial guys on the island have been known to cheat sometimes. Solid Waste Management workers have found motor parts in garbage bags. The damage that would cause to the island incinerators would be the same as if I put a metal fork down a food disposal, or a can of metal chips in the gas tank of my car ... if I had a car.

We can drive the costs of waste management down by increasing our recycling. The only secret — up-front segregation. Separate your own trash. I know I will. It keeps me on the toes of my combat boots to realize that someone — another person — has to physically open my trash bags to make sure I didn't put something in there that should be recycled or would cause damage to our waste disposal equipment. That's a motivator to me ... it motivates me to separate my own trash before I leave it out on my curb for pick-up.

It's a lot easier for me to empty and break down five or six cardboard boxes than it is for the SWM guys to

How to help stop wasting time in trash collection

It's bad for Solid Waste Management workers' morale when they have to do for everyone what would be simple actions for individual residents.

We'd like your help with:

Segregate wastes

Metal, wood, vegetation, cardboard, all batteries except alkaline, white office paper, aluminum cans and tin cans (they're separate recyclables), glass, and brown paper (packing and grocery bags) are all items that can be recycled at USAKA.

If these items are left in the trash, we lose recycling potential and overburden the incinerator plants. Metal mixed in with "wood" or garbage frequently causes breakdowns in shredders and grinders that we use to prepare the wastes for incineration or composting, making the whole process more difficult and expensive.

Empty and flatten cardboard boxes

Remove all packing materials and place in trash bags, then flatten cardboard boxes and stack them for pickup. It's easier for individuals to deal with a few boxes than for solid waste management workers to deal with hundreds daily.

Cut tree limbs

Please cut them to smaller (less than four feet) pieces with the same pruning shear or saw you used to cut them off the tree. You're able to drag heavy branches out to the curb, but workers have to pick up dozens of these large branches every day and put them in trucks. (This doesn't apply to palm fronds, which fall naturally and are hard to cut.)

Bag wastes

Whether garbage or leaves from your yard, everything (besides your recycling bin) should be put in bags and then TIED. Blowing wastes from open bags contribute a great deal to the "litter" problem as they are hauled to waste management facilities.

Learn collection schedules

Please see the enclosed flyer for collection schedules. Recyclables like aluminum cans, glass, tin cans, brown bags and cardboard are picked up on Tuesdays and Fridays. Bulkier items, like wood and metal objects, are picked up on Wednesdays and Saturdays. Hard housing residents — place all items for collection by your curb where you put your garbage. Trailer residents — place collection items by the common area black containers.

We ask that, although your bins sit out all the time, please wait to put recyclables out on scheduled pickup day. This helps all areas look neater and well-kept.

(Editor's Note: Information provided by the Solid Waste Management office. Contact them at 51165, 51760 or 53309 if you need schedules or have other questions.)

deal with hundreds of them a day. And I'm pretty sure I can remember to separate tin cans from aluminum cans from glass bottles.

Here's the deal ... Due to it being more cost-effective, much of our islands' recyclables are shipped up to Pearl Harbor. The government agency running that recycle plant returns two-thirds of the dollars earned to us. If you help me raise the recycle rates on Kwajalein and Roi-Namur, I will take the responsibility of making sure those dollars are used (if you'll pardon the pun ... recycled) back into the program by making recycling even more convenient to you as residents.

I won't forget the employees in the bachelor quarters. We haven't even started them in the recycling program, but we're considering several different options to do that. And, I won't forget the Aluminum Can Recycling for Youth on the installation either. ACRY started recycling efforts on Kwajalein long before I arrived. I'm told these youth groups are currently considering a few options, one of which is for them to collect money from the island's overall recycling revenues. I want to be able to return some proceeds generated to them and to the community that started what is now a wide-scale and viable program.

Another thing you can help me with ... help pick up papers and litter you see blowing around the island and on the beaches. I'm concerned about the amount of paper, plastic and metal cans I see strewn among our beautiful community. While I was out running Sunday morning, I stopped by Coral Sands Beach and it was littered with trash. I also saw trash between many buildings, in the vicinity of the Marshallese Cultural Center and especially around the eating establishments. The community, and Raytheon in particular, have worked very hard to ensure we enjoy an aesthetically appealing environment.

The Peace Corps has a motto, "How far are you willing to go to make a difference?" Are you with me? Hooah!

Kom ruwainene

"Kom ruwainene" is the Marshallese way to say, "Welcome."

Back from Ft. Rucker, Ala., for their second tour are Steve and MaryJon Moore and Marshall, 9, Cody, 5, and Scott, 2. Their first tour was from 1991 to 1993.

Steve works for Boeing in Weapon System Range Integration.

The Moores say, "The island looks terrific. It's wonderful to see old friends again and to be back in 'almost paradise.'"

Ann Elise Peterson and daughter Marcy, 13, arrived recently from Washington.

Ann Elise is a health and home economics teacher at Kwajalein Junior/Senior High School.

She says they're "excited, glad to be here, finally, and in a warm climate."

Recently arrived from Huntsville, Ala., are Terry and Bobbie Rodgers and son Eric, 18.

Terry works for USAKA/KMR in contracting.

Their thoughts on arrival: "The island is a lot bigger than we anticipated, especially when riding our bikes."

The Schubach family recently arrived at Kwaj for their second tour. Wally, his wife, Meredith, and children Michael, 13, and Anne, 8, are here from from Raleigh, N.C. Michael was born at Kwaj during their first tour, 1979 to 1989.

Wally is a software engineer for RSE.

The Schubachs say, "It's great to be back and see so many familiar faces."

Sgt. Charles Johnson arrived recently from Ft. Benning, Ga.

He is personnel sergeant.

He says his thoughts on arrival were, "Is this plane gonna stop before we run out of runway?"

Teachers come from varied backgrounds ...

(From page 1)

After teaching classes with more than 20 children in Colorado Springs, first grade teacher Brandi Brewster said she's looking forward to "small class size and more parent involvement. Also to being in the water a lot."

Brandi Brewster

Although this is his first overseas teaching tour, Brian Brewster, high school science teacher, grew up in Kenya, Ecuador and Switzerland before he moved to Colorado Springs.

Brian Brewster

Holding a degree in biology with an emphasis in education from Colorado State University, Brian is looking forward to teaching on island.

"I'm excited by the chance to work in small classes and to get to know the kids outside of school," he said.

The new high school librarian and yearbook advisor Skip Schmidt felt right at home when he arrived on Kwaj.

"It's very much like the Florida Keys," said Schmidt, who moved here from Florida with his wife, Beverly, who will be working as a secretary in the high school office. Schmidt has also taught in Michigan and for two years in North Africa.

Skip Schmidt

"We thoroughly enjoyed the [Africa] experience, and we started looking for another opportunity," Schmidt said.

Teaching social studies, English and world geography are the perfect classes for someone with Greg Vassar's background.

"The world has been my classroom and it's nice to bring all that experience to the kids," said Vassar after explaining that he has taught in Japan and South Korea. In addition, he spent a summer on a Fullbright Hays scholarship in West Africa.

Vassar found out about Kwaj four years ago on the Internet and kept it in the back of his head until now. He is currently working on his masters of education from University of Kansas.

John Girouard

Although John Girouard had never taught outside the U.S., he went to the Iowa job fair to look for an overseas position because of friends' reports about working overseas.

"[My family] is glad we didn't go to Kuwait. We chose Kwajalein," said Girouard, who will be teaching special education and Asian Studies at the high school.

Originally from Wisconsin, where he earned a degree in broad field social studies, Girouard has taught in Arizona for the last seven years, where he received a master's in special education.

"What I'm most excited about is the Asian Studies with the section devoted to the Marshallese," Girouard said.

High school health and home economics will be taught by Ann Elise Peterson, from Lake Stevens, Wash.

Peterson, who holds a master's in teaching from Wentworth College in Spokane, Wash., arrived on the island with her daughter, Marcy, 13.

"I wanted to broaden my daughter's experience ... [expose] her to new cultures, new ways of thinking," Peterson said, explaining why she went to the Iowa job fair to look for a teaching position.

Jane Christy

The last new high school teacher is also a teacher at the elementary school. Jane Christy, from Iowa City, Iowa, will be teaching art at both schools this coming year.

When Christy, who holds a bachelor's in art and secondary education, attended the Iowa job fair, she was disappointed because she definitely wanted to come here.

"At first there were no openings at Kwajalein. But then a position opened up," she said.

Christy is "hoping to cover every media possible" during the year. She is particularly excited by teaching ceramics to the high school students. Prehistoric art, including dinosaurs and cave paintings, are on her lesson plan for the elementary students.

Ann E. Peterson

Erin Tully

(See NEW, page 5)

New teachers also found on island ...

For the last five years there was only one librarian for the whole district, said the new elementary school librarian, Erin Tully.

The Columbus, Ohio, resident believes having two librarians "would also allow her to be more supportive to the teachers and to let her work individually with the children."

Tully has worked as a school librarian for the last 15 years in Columbus. In addition, she was the public librarian in the children's section of the Columbus metropolitan library.

Within 24 hours of her arrival, her first impression that "everything on the island is beige and brown," was replaced with an appreciation of the island. "I think it's going to be really great."

One of two new sixth grade teachers, Gina Bennett has been on the island almost two years. During that time, she has taught a teacher's education course at the College of the Marshall Islands and has held a full-time job at RSE Supply and Transportation.

With an elementary and sign language communication degree from Westminster College in Missouri, Bennett will teach language arts and reading to the sixth grade.

Her courses will be greatly affected by the school district's theme for the year, which is, "Writing Across the Curriculum."

"[It] will have a big impact on essays and all the writing we will do," she said.

Jennifer Keck, the other new sixth grade teacher, has been on island for a year.

Gina Bennett

She worked as the documentation specialist for the high school, setting up all the scheduling and attendance programs.

With a degree from University of Tennessee, Keck is about half-way through her master's of science and education at the University of New England.

Teaching science, health and some math, she agrees with Bennett about the benefits of this year's theme.

"We will be able to integrate writing into everything we do. Whenever we do labs, we will be able to do summations," Keck explained.

A substitute teacher on Kwajalein for the last year, Wendy Peacock will be teaching second grade full time this year.

Peacock, from Garland, Texas, has been here four years this tour, with a total of 10 years on Kwaj.

Wendy Peacock

Nancy Knighton

Originally from North Carolina, Nancy Knighton spent 25 years teaching "mostly first grade" in south Florida.

She substituted at the elementary school when she first arrived on island, taking a KAPS job in May 1999.

Knighton knew about Kwajalein "all my life. When [I] first got married, [my husband and I] talked about coming here. When this opportunity came up, we took advantage of it," Knighton said.

Jennifer Keck

replaced with a computer class since most of the students already know how to use a computer keyboard when they reach the junior high level, according to Howell.

Howell noted that the school's athletic code has changed this year.

"After being assigned to a team, if a student quits or is dismissed from that team, he or she will not be able to be placed on another team for that season," Howell said. He explained that the rule does not apply if the student is removed for medical reasons or has the approval of the athletic director.

The Marshallese assistance program, which assigns a teacher to act as a liaison between the RMI, USAKA/KMR, the school district and Marshallese students schooled on Kwajalein, will be increased from one hour of the teacher's time to two hours a day. The teacher can use the extra time to tutor the Marshallese students, Howell said.

Howell is looking forward to the new school year.

"We've got some great new teachers this year, and have the wonderful bunch of kids. [We have] parents who are concerned and care about what's happening with their kids. [We also] have small class sizes," Howell said.

Judo duo show how to throw with technique

By KW Hillis
Feature Writer

Arms and legs flying, Tim Waters landed on his back with a thud, thrown by a woman at least a foot shorter than he.

"Wow, cool," said Hannah Poirier, 9, emphasizing the gasps from the other spectators when the first throw was performed during a judo demonstration last Friday evening.

Waters and Pam Johnson, both second-degree brown belts, or nikyu judo instructors, discussed a short history of judo along with safety concerns, class information and demonstrations of the martial art techniques. The demonstration was the first of four given at the CRC to raise interest in classes slated to begin in September.

Waters is an Olympics 2004 judo team hopeful. Johnson has been in competitions since she was 5 years old. Together, they demonstrated techniques that have to be learned to properly perform judo.

Students first learn breathing techniques "to help focus on your center and to help you relax, which is very important," said Waters, breathing in through his nose and grunting the air out. "This form of breathing keeps you from hyperventilating when in a stressful situation."

Stretching is the next step.

"It's a excellent way to exercise. [It] allows you to become flexible and to build your strength," Johnson said.

Ways to fall were noisily demonstrated by Waters as he dropped loudly onto the mat five different ways in rapid succession, while continuing to talk about the importance of learning how to fall properly.

Not even out of breath, Waters and Johnson launched into a discussion and demonstration of throws, chokes and joint manipulations. Each slam to the mat, with Waters usually being thrown by Johnson, made the audience wince. But neither Waters nor Johnson seemed affected by the exercise.

During some of the throw and hold demonstrations, Waters called on his brother, Mike Waters, GBR-P engineer, to help him demonstrate.

Mike Waters, 40 pounds heavier and about six inches taller, was easily thrown and held by his brother.

"It's not about speed and power, it's about using your opponent's size against himself," Tim Waters said.

For more than a thousand years, there was one form of martial arts, called jujitsu. In 1882, Jigoro Kano founded judo. He took jujitsu and separated out the throws, holds and mat work, Johnson said. Judo means "the gentle way."

There's more to judo than just throwing people. Each student is required to learn the names of each move and belt level in Japanese, as well as English, Waters explained.

The instructors reassured the spectators that each student would be thoroughly coached in each new move and the responsibility of using judo.

"The welfare of the person with whom you are working out with is your responsibility ... you must be able to control yourself and your opponent," Johnson said.

Both instructors have an extensive background in judo.

"I was five, and my parents put my brothers and me in judo to run off our excess energy and to learn how to defend ourselves," Johnson explained.

At 13, she placed fourth in the Junior Olympics and competed nationally until she was 18 years old. She returned to the sport before coming to Kwajalein, and will be competing in the World Championships in San Diego next year.

Waters started his judo training in a completely different way.

"I pretty much trained myself with books and videos," Waters said. "My wife and I owned a bakery in Idaho, and I paid the neighborhood kids to come in and let me throw them ... I would give them cinnamon rolls and cokes. I had them lined up.

"Three years ago, I started training. I had to drive 150 miles, round trip, twice a week to see [my instructor]," Waters explained.

Waters also started a judo school, or dojo, during that time.

"I had national and state champions come out of the school. But they were dedicated. They came more than twice a week, they came every day," Waters said.

Waters is looking forward to competing in the 2004 Olympics. The students he teaches at Kwajalein, and his own attendance at classes, count for some of the points that are used in selecting the members of the Olympic judo team.

Signup for the twice weekly classes will be announced in the Hourglass.
