Squadron Leader Glen Ferguson of the Royal Australian Air Force examines an external fuel tank on his F-111C as USAKA airfield worker Peter Patrick stands by to refuel and repower the fighter-bomber. The six-plane squadron landed on Kwajalein Wednesday and left Thursday morning on their way back to Amberly RAAF near Brisbane. Six C-130s with more than 150 personnel will follow later this month. The Aussies recently participated in Red Flag exercises near Nellis Air Force Base in Nevada.

Aeromet wins new contract to March 2012

Aeromet weathered a minor challenge to its 17-year sovereignty at USAKA by winning a new contract that will likely keep it here through March 2012.

The new deal is a $31.1 million cost-plus-fixed-fee contract for meteorological support services, according to Mark Fair, Aeromet site manager. Aeromet has been at USAKA since 1985.

There was one other company in the bidding, according to an announcement by the U.S. Army Space and Missile Defense Command Public Affairs office. No further information was immediately available about the competition.

Fair said the new contract contains no surprises, explaining it's

Tripler military docs put medical skills to work at Ebeye

For the first time in years Tolon Loeak's left eye is not milky-white and nearly opaque from a debilitating cataract. The 75-year-old had her vision restored by Dr. Karl Holzinger, a U.S. Navy captain, last week during an operation at the Ebeye hospital.

Over the last week Holzinger performed many such surgeries, including one on Loeak's husband that same day, as part of a team from Tripler Medical Center under a program funded by the Department of Defense Humanitarian Civic Assistance. The team, led by Dr. (Lt. Col.) David Finger, visited Majuro for five days and then moved to Ebeye last Friday to screen patients for cataracts, eye complications from diabetes and orthopedic problems.

Finger led an HCA team to Majuro and Ebeye last September. Two things are different this time, he said. First, the team was assembled at the last minute when money was found to support the mission. Second, the HCA mission follows a July visit by another team of eye specialists, the Canvasback medical team.

"But there is still plenty to do," Finger said. "I'm glad we were able to get a group down here ... we were able to get year-end

Growing old is culturally relative, but it hurts all the same

I turned 30 this month. I only mention the fact to make a couple of points.

First, a lot of you have yet to submit birthday gifts. After all, I invited everyone to my wedding, the least you could do is shower me with expensive gifts. (On a related note, cash is king when it comes to wedding gifts as well.)

The second point is materially less important, but could have major ramifications in that esoteric body of study known as numerology. Or am I thinking of Scientology?

Anyway, my hypothesis is thus: It's not how old you feel in your mind, it's how old everybody else around you makes you feel.

There are those (usually older than yourself), who delight in comments such as "How's the view from the top of hill?" or "Has the warranty run out yet?" Such questions obviously imply that it's all downhill from here.

Others insist on a little more optimism as our cells begin to deteriorate and die. They say, "Age is all in your mind" or "I'm 50 years young."

But the messages about aging are mixed and varied. I'm still told, "Do it while you're young," while in other realms of performance it's reported by medical authorities that I'm "well past my peak."

The media itself seems to be about aging more than anything else. In what other epoch of human history have we been able to watch perfect strangers go from child stars to beautiful adults to old and wrinkled? When you see a performance of the Rolling Stones, what's the first thing you think? "Wow, these guys still rock" or "Dang, Mick Jagger is looking old."

Maybe that's why the "good die young." Elvis lived a little too long, in retrospect. Stars like Jim Morrison, Jimi Hendrix and James Dean had the decency to check out early, or we would have had to see those grim reminders of mortality every week on TV for years. ("Gee, I don't think I can watch Morrison wiggle his 280-pound frame in those leather pants any longer without getting sick. And, man, does he look old.")

Can you imagine what Madonna is going to look like in another 20 years? I just hope she stops showing her bellybutton at some point.

Speaking of Madonna, as our lifespans grow increasingly longer, the struggle to remain looking (if not feeling) younger seems to become more varied and complex. There's almost nothing that you can't get sucked out, stapled down, straightened up, enlarged or reduced. (I just can't wait for the day when they'll start doing add-ons — like an extra arm or additional ears.)

I suppose I'm one of those people who are nostalgic for the past, when age 50 was considered wizened and old. You had to be more concerned about living life than how you looked while living it.

Someone of my age was the lord of his own manor, had read all the classics of his age and had penned a few minor treatises of note, such as something on the socialistic behavior of lice in a 16th century prison. Today, I've got a BQ room, hardly have time to scan the pictures of Maxim magazine and my most significant cultural contribution to the race was the ear wax collection I forced a fraternity pledge to keep in 1993.

Maybe we should simply turn to the wisdom of a man who has aged quite gracefully over the years — Indiana Jones, a.k.a., Harrison Ford: "It's not the years, but the mileage."

USAKA makes right call on telephone, porn

I would like to address a couple of issues that were brought up in the Roi town hall meeting [Sept. 12].

First, the issue of the 7 cents per minute charged for off-island phone calls.

Whenever there is a military base on foreign soil, the United States is bound, by agreement, to buy the services of the utilities they need.

The Marshallese government had no services for us to buy until about 10 years ago, when they put into place a telephone system. At that time, Kwajalein residents paid $1.40 per off-island phone call, there was no direct dial and you had to have a calling card to place a call.

A few years later, we got direct dial and the 7 cents per minute charge.

I think we're lucky to just have to pay 7 cents a minute instead of possible international toll charges.

Second was the issue that we are an "adult" island and don't need Internet filters on our computers.

I don't care what people do in the privacy of their homes, but the United States government does not owe them free access to it.

The Internet is a free service paid for by the government, and my tax-paying family in the states doesn't need to pay for anyone's "adult entertainment." Find a carrier, pay the monthly fee ... and, yes, you'll have to pay the 7 cents a minute.

Thank you,
Margaret Thompson-Williams

Third-grader Jeffery Pippitt turns one man's job into an opportunity to play as he splashes with delight in the spray produced by a fire hydrant that's being flushed out by Dave Dennis, at left, turning the hydrant off.

The potable water system is being flushed out through the end of the month. Dennis said this is done to the system once a year. If residents experience discolored water, they should open the faucet and flush the service line for several minutes. If the problem persists, call 59081.

School survey: Parents concerned with substance abuse

By Barbara Johnson
Feature Writer

School officials have compiled the results of two districtwide evaluations from late last school year, the spring parent opinion inventory and the Iowa tests, and shared the results at Wednesday night's School Advisory Council meeting.

Karen Ammann, school superintendent, said that the purpose of the parent opinion inventory was to "find out what parents were thinking and establish a baseline for self-study in the spring."

As part of the accreditation process, this is the year the school conducts its self-evaluation, she said, so another survey will be distributed later this school year.

The return on this survey was disappointing, she said, with 50 elementary school responses and 43 from the junior/senior high school.

"When you have small numbers, sometimes the results are skewed," she said.

The survey asked for responses from 1 to 5, with 1 being "Strongly Disagree" and 5, "Strongly Agree." A response of 5 was the most positive. The average composite score of 65 questions at the elementary school was 3.91. The average composite score of 65 questions at the high school was 3.57.

"Generally we were very pleased with the results," Ammann said.

"I think it will be a learning experience. A lot of people took the time to make comments. We got some very positive, and some not so positive, and we'll use them for improvement."

She said one thing they learned is that they're not getting enough information out to parents about specific programs, referring to too many "don't know" responses to questions.

The school also identified the need for more career and vocational education. The response to the statement that the school is doing a good job in career and vocational education at the high school level was one of the lowest, 2.90.

"We'll be working on that," Ammann said.

Parents are also concerned about alcohol and substance abuse and special needs students, she said. The response to the statement that there is not a significant problem with substance abuse at the high school level was 2.97.

The response to the statement that the school meets the needs of students with special needs at the high school level was 2.56. At the elementary school it was 2.70. Ammann said that all these areas will be looked into.

"We'll try to set some goals in the areas of substance abuse, special needs students and vocational and career education," Ammann said.

Some of the highest responses at the elementary school level were in the areas of parent involvement, teachers involving students in learning, teachers assisting students with their work and teachers being concerned about the students.

At the high school level, some of the highest scores were in the areas of ease of meeting with a teacher, teachers providing students assistance and mathematics instruction.

Copies of the Parent Opinion Inventory Analysis Reports are available at the school offices.

Also at Wednesday's meeting, school counselor Bob Ammann presented the results of the Iowa tests given from second to 10th grade last year. Grade equivalents as well as ranks were calculated. For example, at the second grade level, the composite score at Kwajalein was at grade 3.2; At the 10th grade level, the composite score at Kwajalein was at grade 13.

The percentile ranks compared to national school norms can be used to see trends, he said, adding that there can be jumps from year to year, however, because of the small class sizes and class turnovers.

Ammann also created an item analysis for the faculty, showing which types of questions the students had more trouble with than expected.

The purpose of the testing is more to evaluate the program than to evaluate the students, he said. The results are shared with the teachers, parents and the public. Copies of these results are also available in the school offices.

funds. It means training for the team. It is an eye-opening experience."

The experience is definitely different when you work in a place rather than just visit, said Tripler resident Dr. (Capt.) Jefferson Roberts.

"I don't think I could have read anything that could have prepared me for this," he said. "You really don't pay attention to what the lifestyle is like unless you actually do something like we are doing here."

This year the team is performing laser eye surgery and looking at non-operative orthopedic cases in addition to cataract surgery, said Finger, who is Tripler's chief of types of arthritic conditions and back pain," Finger said. "Yesterday we drained fluid out of three peoples' knees and did a lot of steroid injections."

Finger and Roberts helped diagnose patients who local doctors cannot due to lack of MRIs and background. Cases that were diagnosed by local doctors were close to the mark, despite the lack of machines and experience, according to the Tripler doctors.

"Generally, I found that their doctors pretty accurately diagnose," Finger said.

Finger said he was at the old Ebeye hospital last year and is very impressed with the new building.

inopathy," he said. "One way to treat it is to focus a laser on abnormal blood vessels to prevent their visual deterioration."

Touting more diabetic patient education, Dunlap said that the initial damage to diabetics' eyes can happen within just a few hours of a diabetic's blood sugar "going way up."

"It happens very early and once it happens it can't be reversed," he said. "Twenty-five percent of people are diabetic here, which is a huge percentage. Years ago they couldn't have been. That is because they were eating fruit or coconut and fish, things that are just perfect for a diabetic person."

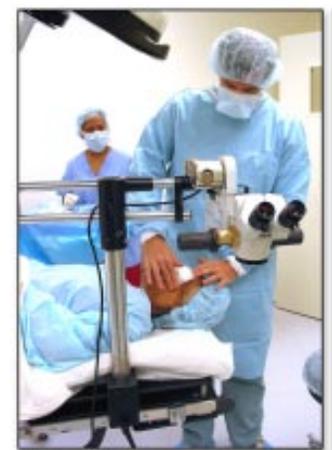

Dunlap said his reason for traveling to Micronesia is "to Rheumatology.

On Saturday, when the hospital is normally closed except in emergency cases, the operating room and two examination rooms were in use. Holzinger, helped by Staff Sgt. Shawn Copeland and Ebeye hospital operating room nurse Rhina James, removed cataracts from six different patients upstairs. Downstairs, Dr. (Col.) Weldon Dunlap, assisted by Ebeye nurse Johannos Seremai, screened eye patients and scheduled those with cataracts for operations on Monday or performed laser surgery on those with eye vascular problems.

In another office just off the front reception area, Finger, with the help of Roberts, manipulated the swollen hands of a patient with gout.

"I've been seeing non-operative orthopedic cases, a lot of people with different

"The hospital is amazing," he said. "At the old hospital ... there was no running water. Our surgeons were pouring alcohol on their hands before cases."

Copeland, a volunteer for this mission when the originally scheduled medical technician needed surgery in Honolulu, said he was very surprised that the hospital was so modern.

"I heard stories from last year and that is what I expected," he said. He likes the idea of helping people who don't have access to cataract surgery.

Downstairs, Dunlap saw his last patient of the day, scheduling him for cataract surgery on Monday morning. The day before Dunlap did four laser procedures with the laser he brought with him from Honolulu.

"Diabetic patients develop diabetic ret-help these people keep their vision. If they lose their vision, they lose their independence."

Upstairs in the operating room, gowned, with hairnet, booties and mask, Holzinger attended to Loeak's surgery. From the time she first sat on the operating table, seeing only shadows with her left eye, until the time she sat up again with the white patch protecting the repaired eye, only 30 minutes elapsed.

"If we were really efficient, we would do two an hour," Holzinger said. A person may need glasses after cataract surgery, he said, but in the exam prior to the surgery, the doctors try to get a lens that is close to what the patient needs to see.

"I really, really enjoy doing it. I like to be as busy as possible," he said. "We don't see a cataract like she had."

Aeromet plans radar upgrade, remote site work ...

"business as usual" for the Tulsa, Okla.-based company. He did say that if Aeromet had lost, it could have been a blow to several major projects currently underway at the weather station.

For example, Kwajalein is under consideration to be a ground validation site for NASA's new program, Global Precipitation Mission, an expansion of the Tropical Rainfall Measuring Mission, according to Fair. TRMM measured tropical and subtropical rainfall and used one satellite for its mission. GPM proposes to use up to nine satellites, Fair said, and will measure precipitation to determine global weather effects.

"They want to use Kwajalein as one of their [ground validation] super sites," he added.

Another big project on the horizon is an upgrade to Aeromet's S-band radar so that it can double its scientific sampling rate of rain drops and other weather phenomena. Currently, the radar takes measurements every six minutes. NASA wants measurements taken every three minutes, Fair said.

"The more frequently you can do measurements [of a subject], the more you can learn about its behavior," he said.

The work will involve major upgrades to the turning and control systems and may require pulling the radar completely off its pedestal, according to Fair. The work will probably be done during a typical dry period, perhaps around December 2003, he said.

A third improvement in the works involves acquiring a Coupled Ocean/Atmosphere Mesoscale Prediction System, which would provide super high-resolution capabilities for numerical weather prediction. The system, developed by the Navy, would be a new asset for the weather station and the range, Fair said.

"Good meteorology is assisted by good numerical weather prediction," he explained. "This would have been in jeopardy if we hadn't gotten the contract."

Aeromet may also be tasked with more remote site operations as the idea of a Pan-Pacific test theater that includes facilities in the Marshalls, Hawaii, Alaska and mainland USA comes to fruition, Fair said. Aeromet meteorologists could even find themselves supporting ships, such as Naval Aegis missile cruisers, for sea-based launches.

"We're in the midst of a number of significant improvements," Fair noted.

He said the contract doesn't contain any surprises for the company's 16 staff members, which include 10 degreed meteorologists. No staff or benefit changes are planned, he added.

"We don't anticipate losing anything," he said. "We don't make widgets. It's all about people."

"We have a continuous history of doing the job well, and we'll continue to try to do it even better," Fair said.

"We're in the midst of a number of significant improvements."

radial piston engines. Within that same year he was promoted to crew chief. In 1991, he went to Canada to learn more about Caribou aircraft. Two years later, Phillip went to Hawaii to learn about the Dash-7, which was replaced about two years ago with the 1900D.

"Honolulu had to be the best place to work at," Phillip said.

In 1995, he went back to Canada to learn more about the Dash-7, and then went to Pittsburgh to study the methods of nondestructive tests.

Now Phillip, 54, is a qualified inspector on visual inspection, liquid penetrate testing, magnetic particle testing, eddy current testing, ultrasonic testing and radiographic testing.

"I started on the bottom and worked my way to the top for 20 to 30 years, so I feel real good, and it was very challenging," Phillip said. "The most interesting thing working here was learning from people who come and go. I also enjoyed learning the new technology, really modern, something new."

Phillip has five children; two live in Hawaii and three live on Ebeye. Phillip owns three homes, one on Ebeye, one in Waipahu, Hawaii, and one with his wife on Wotje. After Phillip retires he plans to travel from island to island.

"Then I am going to work for God, full time, helping people, and trying to help at the church," Phillip said.

Brad Marks, Aviation Quality Control manager, said, "It's going to be a pretty bad loss. Donald has been a very important part of the team. He will be sorely missed. I really do hate to see him go."

Schools developing new curricula for language arts, industrial tech ...

Other announcements:

Karen Ammann said that on Sept. 11 elementary students gathered at the flagpole for a ceremony to remember the tragedy.

"We were very pleased with the way they conducted themselves," she said, adding that they were very respectful and quiet.

New curricula:

This year a new language arts curriculum will be developed for grades K-12, and a new industrial technology curriculum will be developed for grades 7-12, junior/senior high school principal Steve Howell said.

"The first meetings have been held, and we're well on our way," he said, adding that the rough drafts should be done by January.

Howell said that the language arts curriculum is a big job, but they have some good people on the committee.

Karen Ammann explained that the language arts curriculum will be integrated into the reading curriculum at the elementary level. She also said that language arts is the grammar and writing aspect of English.

Rounding the bases

Scott Pratt, Community Activities Adult Athletics supervisor, smooths out Brandon Field Wednesday afternoon after several loads of dirt were dumped there to fill in pockmarks in the infield. Pratt said the fill should help keep puddles off the field as well.

AFN to air National Geographic show

From staff reports

Set your VCRs on Sept. 30, as American Forces Network-Kwajalein will air a National Geographic episode featuring the atoll and a dark chapter in its World War II history.

"Riddles of the Dead: Execution Island" will air on channel 9 at 8 p.m. Sept. 30, according to Rich Feagler, AFN-Kwajalein program manager. The episode, the fifth in a series, is about the U.S. Army Central Identification Laboratory in Hawaii and its search to find nine missing Marines believed to have been executed on Kwajalein in 1942 by the Japanese.

The three-member film crew spent several weeks in January filming the CILHI team, which was here for two months excavating the far west end of the island. The Marines' remains were not found.

Phillip retires 30 years after first coming to Kwaj

By CJ Johnson
Contributing Writer

Donald Phillip, aircraft inspector at the Aviation Department, will retire at the end of this month after working on Kwajalein for nearly 30 years.

"I'm going to just relax after I retire," Phillip said.

Phillip grew up with five brothers and five sisters on Ebeye. In 1971, he graduated from the Marshall Islands high school in Majuro.

"I wanted to go to college, and I got a scholarship, but for some reason my transcript could not be sent so I was kind of cut off from doing that," Phillip said. "When I had nothing to do and couldn't find a job, the U.S. Army helped me find a job."

In 1973, Phillip started to work in Aviation as a refueler. Two years later he went to Travis Air Force Base in California to train on fueling military aircraft. After returning, he worked on aircraft as a mechanic and was the only Marshallese worker qualified to run the C-141 aircraft fuel panel at the cockpit.

In 1979, Phillip quit his job in Aviation to go to Honolulu Community College to study drafting.

In 1989, Phillip then went to a Naval base in California to study more about
