Job Corps opens students' futures

By April Brown

The three-month course offered through Kwajalein's Job Corps is not just a temporary program. The course lays groundwork that extends well into the future.

"Job Corps is changing people's lives," said Marshismo Harry, a Job Corps student. "It's a great opportunity for the Marshallese people."

Harry leaves for his training at a stateside Job Corps campus in just under two months.

Job Corps students attend Kwajalein's campus and then go to a stateside campus, said Ruby Butterworth, Kwajalein Job Corps Site manger. Students can find work there or they can return to the RMI to find a job.

After graduating from high school, Harry had planned to pursue a political science degree but a lack of funds prevented him from accomplishing his goal. Many students, like Harry, chose to go to Job Corps since there aren't a plethora of

Pentagon after 9-11

Indoor memorial at impact site open

By Casie Vinall

Special to American Forces Press Service

WASHINGTON — Today, there's no visible reminder of the Sept. 11 terrorist attack on the Pentagon.

The destroyed section of the building has been rebuilt. Its gray stone facade has been meticulously restored.

The outside appears as it has since the military headquarters was built in 1941. Inside, however, is another story.

The inside section has been restored with one significant addition: the Pentagon Memorial and Chapel.

This facility now stands at the exact site of impact to honor the 184 attack victims, serving as a solemn and fitting reminder of the tragic day none who witnessed will forget. Accessible to the public only through special tours, the memorial and chapel was designed by Defense Department artists and opened in September 2002.

Running towards life connects new friends

Dear Marty,
How is your job search in Okinawa going?

You know, there is an old saying about people who should meet — do. When our paths crossed, the friendship was so immediate and solid, I wonder about the reasons we were meant to meet.

I read a book years ago, "Gone to Soldiers." Each of its 12 chapters introduces a different, individual character. It was like a tapestry — each of the 12 people, a single thread — because, by the end of the book without any of them realizing it, all of their paths crossed during WWII. They all met and each had an impact on the other 11 characters' lives.

What is the reason I met you at the Hickam AFB terminal a few weeks ago? Was it to tell you about job possibilities at Kwajalein or was it for the dose of self-confidence you gave me? How many times have I sat in an airport surrounded by hundreds of people, and never spoke to another person? What kind of insight or laughter did I miss by not talking to the person next to me? Or, better still, what should I have shared with another person that might have made a difference to their day?

I was in Honolulu for three medical referrals and my self-confidence was in a dark hole somewhere. I felt like a train wreck that was still skidding down the tracks ... just hadn't come to a complete stop. The three hours we talked while waiting for our planes, to Kwajalein for me and Okinawa for you, were three of the most enjoyable hours of my life. I feel like you and I are old friends. Is it easier to let the guards and barriers down with someone we guess we'll never see again?

A girlfriend wrote to me a few years ago that she forgot "we're only allowed to look back at what might have been ... that we can't live each minute running toward life with open arms, taking in all the wonderfulness that crosses our path."

Whew! That's heavy, because meeting people is fun to me. My son told me recently, "Mom, you've never met a stranger. You just don't know their names." But, I also don't want to be one of those strange little old ladies you meet on an airplane who talks incessantly and makes you want to start drinking somewhere over Denver ... at 9 a.m.!

When my Aunt Betty said, "Honey, it's taken you 50 years to become this bad, so don't change now," I took that as a compliment, because I want to keep meeting people like you, even if it's for a few minutes. I looked like Hell-on-the-half-shell that day and the fact that you chose to see around that confirmed something I had cautiously started to believe again, that there are genuine, kind-hearted men in the world.

So, my friend, good luck with the job search and may your path cross with someone else's today.

Patience can't be a virtue since it's a necessity here

"Count to ten, very slowly."

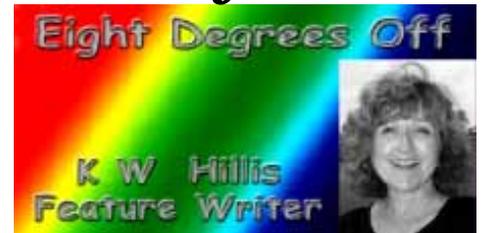

Acquiring patience is something I've been working on since childhood. But I don't think I'm alone.

The Rev. Rick Funk's sermon last Sunday was on acquiring patience and what you sign up for when you try to be patient. He said when you focus on developing patience, that's when your alarm doesn't go off, you have a stain on your shirt as you go out of the door, you have a flat and you get to an important meeting five minutes late — just late enough to be voted to be in charge of some very horrible job.

That sermon made me think about living here versus stateside, and I think it actually takes more patience to live here. Yes, yes, I know in the states you have to be patient in stalled traffic and in lines which we don't experience here, but this is a whole other level of patience here.

I did a short, very scientific, independent study on this — asking my co-workers their opinions and also a couple of other people. I think the margin of error is about 90 percent.

The wait between ordering an item from off island and the receipt of one of those wonderful package slips in your Post Office box is one of the strongest arguments for needing additional patience here. Many of the Kwaj and Roi old-timers have honed their patience skills by scheduling their Christmas and birthday celebrations two to three weeks after the actual date to coincide with the receipt of presents from the states.

"I think patience should be a requirement to come to live here," said reporter April. She said that additional patience is needed because everyone knows everyone else's business on the island, and they all like to talk about it, which requires a deep well of patience.

Reef sweep turns up note on Wonmak Island

By KW Hillis
Associate Editor

Time and current brought a message in a bottle to rest on the shores of Wonmak Island, on the west reef next to Ileginni Island. A Kwajalein Police Department reef sweep on March 8, this year, brought engineman Abimelek Danny to the same shore, where he discovered the bottle in a pile of flotsam and jetsam.

"I saw the bottle with the paper inside and I picked it up," he said. "It was hard to open so we broke the bottle and pulled out the piece of paper and one dollar."

Danny said he handed the items over to Sandy Herrington, KPD accountant, who had joined the KPD team for the sweep and photographed the event.

"With all that trash it was amazing that he spotted it," wrote Herrington in a letter to the originators of the message in the bottle.

The message in the bottle, written on Holland America Line stationery, was from Fred and Debbie Dodd of Oregon City, Ore. In it they gave a reason for the message and asked a favor of the finder.

"We've decided to join the many who have sailed before us, in testing the currents and the goodwill of tropical beachcombers," they wrote. "We ask that you, having been selected by the fates to be a participant in our experiment, return this [message] by mail."

Herrington sent a letter back to the Dodds on March 17, along with photographs of the find, a map of the world with Wonmak Island highlighted and a question of when and where the bottle was launched, she said.

"We were on a Holland America Lines ship, the Zaandam, on a 21-day cruise with a transit of the Panama Canal," the Dodds wrote back in a June 13 letter.

The Dodds put their note in a bottle they got from the ship's wine steward on Oct. 13, 2001, and then they dropped it off the fantail "about 70 miles off the coast of Costa Rica."

The Dodds were very surprised to hear about the message being found.

"Imagine our shock when we received your letter almost 18 months later!" they wrote. "We fully expected to have it either wash up on a beach in Central America or to sink and never be heard of again."

In thanks for returning the message, the Dodds sent a box full of Oregon food specialties along with their letter which Herrington passed along to Danny since he had spotted the bottle.

The Dodds, who are planning their sixth cruise to Alaska in September, the one through the Panama Canal being their fifth, wrote that the closest they had been to the Marshall Islands was Tahiti in October 2002. They plan to visit New Zealand and Australia someday and warned Herrington to keep a careful watch.

"Keep looking for bottles with messages, we may send another floating your way someday," they wrote.

The road to patience is rocky and full of tests...

That is a fact of life out here and living, eating, working and socializing with the same small group of people does, on occasion, take patience.

Mr. Patience, Dan the graphics man, focused on the additional patience needed to deal with technology.

"It's like being in the Dark Ages," he said.

I know, here we are, surrounded with state-of-the-art, high tech equipment which makes us the envy of all other testing ranges, but Dan isn't talking about the range. He's talking about the time it takes to print his amazing graphics to our office printer and the time it takes to connect to the Internet at home.

Dan does admit he may not be the "most" patient of people.

We really don't get stuck in traffic, unless you count the "rush hour" traffic when the Terex is moving a Matson container and all the vans on island are stuck behind it coming down Lagoon Road. But we do have to be patient when, a block away from our home, a monsoon descends and tries, I think, to dissolve us. Then, of course, as we drag ourselves, dripping and disheveled, through the front door at work — the sun pops up — like this morning.

Count to ten....

I do agree with Rev. Funk when he said that the only way you can get patience is to be tested.

Maybe this island is a testing ground for more than National Missile Defense. Maybe it's a testing ground for patience.

Rev. Funk must be trying to increase the amount of patience he has too, since he was seen at Ten-Ten on the same day as his patience sermon buying a new tire.

Turns out, he got a flat on his way to the airport to fly to Roi to give his patience sermon there.

Count to ten ... very slowly.

Work options increased by Job Corps training ...

options for Marshallese to complete higher education or find work.

"I was staying home, doing nothing," he said. "I decided to apply to Job Corps because it would be a good opportunity to finish my degree."

Like Harry, students at Job Corps are learning skills that will prepare them for their vocational training, Butterworth said. Thirty students, nine of whom are new, are moving through the beginning stages of math courses and environmental studies.

Roxanne Lebje, now working as the Job Corps secretary, entered the program in 1993 for different reasons.

"All of my friends were doing it. I wanted to do it too," she said. "[Also] I was interested in the financial aid.

The program focuses on reading, math and health education as well as English as a second language.

"This is mainly for them to learn to speak and understand English so they can transfer into their vocational field of choice," Butterworth said.

The students spend time each day researching different jobs they are interested in, learning more about the qualifications needed to fill that position. Based on their research they will attend vocational school in the states through Job Corps to pursue a career in their chosen field, she said.

The program has improved in many ways since Lebje was a student at Job Corps through 1995.

"When I was a student, we didn't use the Internet," she said.

Butterworth said there are a lot of other differences than the addition of technology to the program.

"Job Corps is really focusing on work experience and references," she said.

While they are taking courses they are also doing training in different offices which can help them in the future.

"Sometimes the students are offered jobs where they worked when they finish their training, which is always nice," she said.

The students are also learning employability skills, including dressing for work, responding positively to supervision and how to solve problems in the workplace, that will give them a polish that many don't have just coming out of college, Butterworth said.

The eight weeks of job training, the final step before attaining their degree, usually takes place in the states, near one of the Job Corps campuses. Butterworth is hoping to establish something similar here for students who want to be closer to home.

"We're hoping to develop a work experience with KRS so they have the option of doing their final training stage here," Butterworth said. "KRS has already expressed interest in getting something like that going."

Job availability is the deciding factor for many Job Corps students on whether or not they will return to the RMI after they're done with their education.

Harry is planning on attending flight school after he is done with his training, but he is unsure as to whether he will return to the Republic of the Marshall Islands.

"If Kwajalein needs pilots, I might be coming back," he said with a smile.

About 60 percent of the students stay in the states after completing their training and most of them do get work, Butterworth said. For the 40 percent that return to the RMI the employment rate is much lower for job availability.

"There just aren't any job openings," she said. "They all want to come back but they don't because they want to work, so they send the money home to their families."

Being close to her family was the reason why Lebje returned, and luckily she obtained a position in the Job Corps office. Many students hope to do the same thing so that they are close to their families while working, Butterworth said.

Where jobs are available, Job Corps program graduates have a foot in the door, said Alan Taylor, RMI Relations manager.

"We are always looking for people with a basic subset of skills and Job Corps people always seems to come away with a set of skills they can really sell," Taylor said. "Their experience makes them stand out."

Taylor, responsible for hiring on-island KRS personnel, constantly

Roxanne Lebje, Job Corps secretary, photocopies paperwork for one of the courses. Lebje attended Job Corps on Kwajalein and then on the Maui campus from 1993-95 before returning to the RMI in 1996 to work in the Kwajalein Job Corps office.

screens employees and looks for experience in possible candidates.

"We try to send the best qualified applicants to hiring managers," he said. "Most frequently those are Job Corps graduates."

Both Taylor and Butterworth concur that the higher the education and experience level, the better the opportunities are for students.

"We're on a big push to get our students to go to advance training," Butterworth said. "There are certified schools in the states that they can attend through Job Corps and get financial aid to do it."

Whether they return home, or stay in the states, the Job Corps has opened doors for students who thought there weren't any options left.

Lebje agrees that the program is a positive thing, as long as the student takes advantage of the possibilities.

"Finish the program," she said. "Students can get terminated for drinking, fighting, all kinds of stuff. Don't do that. Finish the program and go on to college."

Harry credits the Job Corps program with making these opportunities available to him and he hopes others will try.

"To my fellow Marshallese, I just want to let them know that Job Corps is great job training for people," Harry said. "They can go to the states and come back or stay there if they study hard and focus on their future goals."

Florida DoD vacation spot opens next spring

Special to American Forces Press Service

ORLANDO, Fla - The refurbished Armed Forces Recreation Center Shades of Green on Walt Disney World Resort won't open till March 1, 2004, instead of the originally planned Dec. 15, 2003, date.

Unexpected construction delays caused officials to move the date back 76 days, according to Peter F. Isaacs, chief operating officer at the U.S. Army Community and Family Support Center. The Army serves as the executive agent, operating AFRCs for DoD.

"When we were on schedule, we began accepting guest reservations in December of last year," said Isaacs. "We sincerely regret the inconvenience this causes our customers and want to give them as much advance notice as possible. We are in the process of notifying those who have reservations and offering them other options."

Shades of Green General Manager Jim McCrindle personally signed more than 2,200 letters to guests already booked at Shades of Green, informing them of the delay. "We're genuinely sorry for the delay, but it was unavoidable," he said.

Guests who already hold reservations are offered three options:

Keep the same vacation dates for 2004 at the same room rates guaranteed in 2003.

Keep their vacation dates for 2003 at a comparable Disney Resort at the same room rates plus the applicable state tax of 11 percent.

Cancel the existing reservation and receive a full refund.

The renovation and expansion project that began in April 2002 was driven by high demand that kept the original 288 rooms at or near 100 percent occupancy. The hotel is financially self-sufficient, and no taxpayer dollars are used in the operations or for the new construction. When it reopens, there will be 586 new or renovated rooms, 500 new covered parking spaces and 7,500 square feet for special events.

The current room rates of $66 for E-1 through E-5 will only go up $4 to $70. Other rates are computed on a sliding scale based on rank.

The Armed Forces Recreation Center is open to DoD ID-card holders in all branches of military service: active duty and reserve components, DoD civilians, both military and civilian DoD retirees, and their families.

Pentagon additions reminder of tragic day ...

Inside the dimly lit memorial, a quote by President Bush is inscribed on the polished steel central wall along with the names of those lost and missing: "One death can leave sorrow that seems almost unbearable. But to all of you who lost someone here, I want to say: You are not alone."

The adjacent walls display the Purple Heart medal and the Defense of Freedom medal. A folded flag that covered the casket honoring the victims during the group burial at nearby Arlington National Cemetery on Sept. 12, 2002, hangs on the opposite wall.

Upon a table in the center, the pages of a memorial book are open to Brady Kay Howell, 26, from Rexburg, Idaho.

Perhaps not one of the better-known victims, his story on the page begins with "a beloved and fun-loving husband, son, brother, uncle, and friend" - a familiar story of so many victims.

Bill Eicher, an assistant in the Army chaplain's office, regularly visits the memorial and chapel. He describes it as a "very sad and heart-wrenching" reminder, but also a "very befitting tribute to those who died."

"In some ways it's much like the Vietnam wall," said Eicher. "Both are very solemn and sad - appropriately so."

As Eicher leaves the memorial, a group from the Air National Guard Crisis Action Team at Andrews Air Force Base, Md., enters. One member walks up to the plaque bearing the names, stating to his group,

"We are mindful too, and resolute, that their deaths, like their lives, shall have meaning."

— Donald Rumsfeld
Defense Secretary

"Here's the family I worked with." He takes a long piece of parchment, places it over the name of his friend and rubs the name onto the paper with a pencil provided on a side table.

Another Guardsman, Chaplain (Col.) David Cooper, is visiting the memorial for the first time. "You just can't describe it," he said, speaking of the tragedy. The memorial, he declares, is a "fitting tribute."

"It's moving when you think about it and focus on it," said Eric Prasse, an electrical inspector at the Pentagon who said he stops in often. It "helps to have a memorial here that (says) the victims were thought of and well-honored."

Prasse was on-site when the crash occurred. He lost one of his friends in the attack. He takes out the friend's small picture he carries in his wallet.

Prasse estimates he has visited the memorial a hundred times. "I've got a lot of appreciation for everyone who has built the building as well and as fast as they did," he said, referring to how quickly the damage was repaired and sections reopened.

A family with small children enters the memorial, children too young to know this tragedy. This memorial exists for them too, so that they can honor those who died, lest they be forgotten.

Inscribed on a plaque in the memorial are words from Defense Secretary Donald Rumsfeld on Oct. 11, 2001: "We are mindful too, and resolute, that their deaths, like their lives, shall have meaning."

An outdoor memorial that will be open to the public is to be built on nearly two acres of land along the path the passenger jet took just before it hit the building. The Army Corps of Engineers began planning the outdoor memorial in October 2001. Corps officials selected a winning design from over 1,000 contest entries. They project a Sept. 11, 2004, dedication, the third anniversary of the attack.

Denial band rocks the islands

Lead singer Dan Mecher of Denial performs with the band at the Yokwe Yuk Club Wednesday night.

The group hails from Cincinnati, Ohio, and said this tour is their first trip outside of their home state. The crowd danced the night away at Gilligan's during the band's performance.

The group said it was the first time anyone had ever danced at one of their concerts.

The band also rocked Roi-Namur residents last night at The Outrigger.
