Future of TRADEX remains on track for now

By Jim Bennett
Editor

With nearly 40 years of service, TRADEX will not retire for the foreseeable future.

Col. Curtis L. Wrenn Jr., USAKA/KMR commander, decided to keep the radar Tuesday during a meeting of KMR officials.

The meeting followed a 30-day study by MIT/Lincoln Laboratory, in conjunction with Raytheon. The study focused on the viability and cost of operating and further developing the radar, in light of the possibility that many of the radar's functions could be redundant with other sensors and that it was the least utilized of the sensors. The study found, instead, that TRADEX provides important contributions and several unique capabilities to KMR, and that users depend on TRADEX data. As the second most heavily utilized sensor, a TRADEX shut-down would seriously impact KMR and users.

"There is no perfect radar," said Dr. John Leeper, MIT/LL site manager. "There are advantages and disadvantages to each, but the L- and S-bands [frequencies of TRADEX] provide a good mix."

Radars to stay at KREMS through 2006, Wrenn says

The various sensors at the KREMS complex look at things differently. While ALTAIR provides the range a capability that is far-reaching, with a wide beam width that scans the skies and space to pick out large items like an incoming RV, the ALCOR/MMW radars use a very confined beam to measure specific, smaller details, like the shape of the RV. TRADEX falls in between, with a wide enough beam to find a target complex of RV and decoys and offer details on the complex, to some degree.

Furthermore, unlike other sensors, TRADEX augments and backs up ALTAIR on the Space Surveillance Network mission for the U.S. Space Command. TRADEX performs 10 hours a week of that mission and could get as much as 40 hours a week when the Kwajalein Modernization and Remoting project is completed.

But officials questioned a list of needed improvements that could cost millions over the next five years. The study found areas where the list could be pared down to "sustainment" levels, and consequently, bring the projected costs down to a level that makes TRADEX a cost-

Injuries on the rise in 2001

By Peter Rejcek

After four years of seeing dramatic improvement in its safety record, Raytheon is experiencing an increase in recordable injuries, but officials are acting quickly to put the brakes on this unhealthy development.

"We're putting a plan into place to reverse the trend," said Jim Hardin, Environmental, Safety and Health manager. "This year we've seen a significant number of lost-time cases. The severity of the injuries has been high."

The problem prompted a company-wide memo from John Wallace, Kwajalein Programs director for Raytheon, this week. Wallace noted Raytheon was ranked 25th out of 28 for Raytheon Technical Services Company sites for its recordable injury rate at the end of January.

"We have all worked very hard to reduce our injury rates at Kwajalein, Residents David Miller, background left, and Quentin Jones watch the action unfold between the Sun Warrior and Ricky Reyes Thursday night at Brandon Field. More than an estimated 2,000 people, including over 1,300 from Ebeye, showed up to watch one of the biggest spectacles in the island's history. The show began at 6 p.m. with autographs by all 12 wrestlers, with action beginning at 7 p.m. Look for additional photos and a full story on the action Tuesday.

Real men don't vacuum cat hair or water plants

"Do I seem that pathetic?" I asked the nice lady. "Oh, and thanks for the chicken."

Yes, folks, my wife is off-island temporarily, and I have found myself reverting to my natural bachelor instincts.

At first, it was cool. The cats and I had the run of the place. I drank Kool-Aid from the bottle in the fridge; the cats didn't care. The cats left tufts of hair everywhere; no one chased them with a vacuum. We stayed up late watching old John Wayne movies on tape or I might visit with friends at their homes or at the Club.

"You've got to go home to the little lady, huh?" I would say with much bravado. "You don't see me calling home, do ya?"

My friends recognized my plight and pitched in. I had several dinner invitations and actually went an entire work week without cooking a meal.

Ah, but soon I would hit "the wall," as I settled into a sense of normalcy.

When I cooked, I took from my old pre-married standbys — canned beef stew over toast, for example. Two words, folks, "Yum Me." And very easy to fix, too. Heat canned beef stew in sauce pan. Add a little Pohnpei pepper to taste — a recent addition to an old recipe — and toast two slices of bread. Pour hot beef stew over toast. Serve with a cold beverage of your choice.

It's not that I can't cook, but with just me eating the meal, it hardly seems worth the trouble.

Then my wife called with questions.

She asked how the plants were.

"They're fine, I haven't touched them," I said.

"But did you water them?" she asked.

"Uhhh ... they look great."

I'll be stopping by Macy's West on the way home today for a new peace lily.

She asked if the cats had eaten recently. I told her they were fine, but had been working out a lot, which would explain the unusually fit look they're sporting.

"How are those projects coming along?" she'd ask.

"Moving right along," I responded.

Now as a man, I'm not helpless without my wife. Full-time bachelors often live quite well. I did, too, when I was one. It's just that as a temporary bachelor, my routine is shot.

People ask me to pay for things and I look for cash that isn't there. You-know-who does the books at my house.

The big thing is, I miss my wife, and I knew I would, but it's the little things that take a guy by surprise.

I've got just one weekend left before I leave to join her. So I've got two full days to clean the house, reorganize the closets, remodel the back bedroom, replace the dead plants, stuff the cats with carbos, trash all the receipts from Surfway, buy and build two new bikes, buy four birthday presents, construct an overhead deck cover, police the yard, rebuild two rock gardens, win Quarters of the Quarter and claim the C- Division World Series title.

I could be busy... excuse me for a second, the phone is ringing.

"Oh, Peter, you want to go to the club for dinner? Good call."

Gotta go.

Cash for coins exchange does $5,300 in business

By KW Hillis

Clink, clink, clink emanated from Ten-Ten Monday afternoon as residents carried heavy bags, bottles and boxes laden with a treasure trove of coins into the store. They left stuffing greenbacks in their wallets.

Forty-seven people took advantage of Vending Services' offer to exchange loose change for dollar bills to the tune of $5,300, said Paul Fritz, Vending/Laundry manager.

"It was good to see the community come forward," Fritz said. "There was always a line. I kept thinking the line would get smaller [but] it stayed pretty constant."

A shortage of change on both Kwajalein and Roi-Namur prompted Vending Services' offer.

"Roi's Finance has been begging for weeks for change," Fritz said. "The bank used to have a contract to bring in change to us. But they didn't renew the contract ... it is quite expensive to ship [change] in."

A nickel and dime shortage showed up around January, with the Tape Escape giving pennies rather than nickels as change, Fritz said.

The smallest amount brought in by one person to be exchanged was $1.74; the largest amount was $605.40.

"A kid brought 174 pennies in. He wanted to buy some batteries," Fritz said. "About half [of the people] said, 'This is vacation or mad money.'"

Mike Johnson brought two cups full of change down to Ten-Ten.

"We just empty our change out of our pockets each day," Johnson said. "I was eventually going to have to roll and take them down to the bank. I'm glad I didn't have to roll them."

Johnson's 40-minute wait netted him $230.66.

Cashing in ...

12,480 quarters	312 rolls	$3,120
11,800 dimes	236 rolls	$1,180
16,000 nickels	400 rolls	$ 800
20,000 pennies	400 rolls	$ 200

"It was a surprise that it was that much," Johnson said. "If [my wife] Barbara will let me keep it, I'll spend it on dive stuff and paying off golfing debts."

The line in Ten-Ten stretched back into the greeting cards section for most of the afternoon. Fritz said he'll hold another exchange in about a month for those residents who couldn't make it Monday.

"We'll make it an all-day affair, with two coin counters," Fritz said.

Residents can bring loose change to exchange at building 816 after lunch any workday.

To use or not to use: Antibiotics are not a cure-all for disease

From staff reports

Antibiotics are not a cure-all. In fact, prescribing antibiotics for viral infections such as the "Kwaj Crud," colds or even some ear infections can lead to antibiotic-resistant bacteria, according to Dr. Jill Horner, Kwajalein Hospital staff physician. Misuse of prescribed antibiotics by the patient can also be a factor in producing antibiotic-resistant bacteria.

With a $4 billion estimated cost of treating antibiotic-resistant bacteria, the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention is heading a national endeavor advising physicians and pharmacists to prescribe antibiotics sparingly, even for low-grade bacterial infections.

There are two types of germs that cause infections — bacteria and viruses, Horner said. Antibiotics can usually cure bacterial infections, but have no effect on viral infections. Most coughs, sore throats and all colds are caused by viral infections. Antibiotics are rarely needed, even in the case of bronchitis, she said.

"Coughing up yellow or colored sputum is not a sign of a bacterial infection," Horner said. "Antibiotics should only be used for sinus infections that persist beyond the initial 10 to 14 days."

Viruses are also the culprits for most sore throats even when pus is seen on the tonsils, Horner said. Strep throat is a viral infection and does require antibiotics, and Kwajalein Hospital has a rapid strep test available.

"Everybody comes in for the 'Kwaj Crud,'" Horner said explaining that the illness is a combination of symptoms that include sinus pressure, nasal drainage, sore throat and cough. "Over-the-counter medications, available at the pharmacy, lessen the symptoms," she said.

Even ear infections are being targeted for pain medication rather than antibiotic prescriptions.

"They are most often caused by viruses. Repeated infections may require antibiotics in certain high-risk children, but not all," Horner said.

"We misuse [antibiotics], in that we prescribe them for people ... rather than spend time educating the patient about the correct use of antibiotics," Horner said, adding that some people show up at the hospital and say "I'm here to get my antibiotics; I always feel better when I get them."

Actually, people usually start feeling better within three to five days whether they receive antibiotics or not, Horner said.

Antibiotics prescribed for a viral infection can kill or cause each person's natural flora or bacteria to mutate, leading to antibiotic-resistant bacteria, she said. When patients do not take an antibiotic prescribed for a bacterial infection for the required number of days, then only the most sensitive bacteria are killed. Resistant strains are left behind and can mutate to resist the next dose of antibiotics.

Progressively stronger and stronger antibiotics are required to kill bacterial diseases, Horner said. Eventually intravenous antibiotics and hospitalization may be required for some patients.

Kwajalein Hospital is one of many hospitals across the nation tracking the sensitivity of various strains of bacteria on a monthly basis, Horner said. Along with the rest of the United States, Kwaj has seen an alarming increase in antibiotic-resistant bacteria.

Diabetes can hit at any time

Family history, lifestyle, ethnicity among factors

Around Thanksgiving, G.L. "Cowboy" Galloway noticed a difference in how he felt.

"I didn't want to go anywhere or do anything ... At 5:30 or 6 in the evening, I wanted to go to bed," Galloway said, adding that he wasn't sleeping well. "I had to go to the bathroom all the time [and I was] waking up thirsty several times in the night."

Known for his spicy Texas cooking, Galloway started to crave sweets.

"I would go buy a bag of Butterfingers and eat the whole bag in a night,"

"It made me realize that my life is finite."

feeling. Diagnosed as a diabetic last October, Christopher recommended that his dad get checked for diabetes.

A simple blood test identified 42-year-old Galloway as a diabetic.

The Kwajalein Hospital Health Awareness Committee selected March to focus on diabetes because it is the sixth leading cause of death by disease and the seventh leading cause of death overall, according to the American Diabetes Association. Almost one-third of the estimated 16 million diabetics in the U.S. do not even know they have the disease.

In the U.S., 2,200 people are diagnosed with diabetes every day, said Kim Morris, Kwajalein Hospital registered nurse.

There are two main types of diabetes.

Type I diabetes is insulin-dependent diabetes and usually occurs in childhood. Five to 10 percent of diabetics are Type I, Morris said.

Ninety to 95 percent of diabetics are Type II or non-insulin dependent Galloway said.

In mid-January, Galloway told his son Christopher, 26, how he was diabetes. Type II diabetes occurs when the pancreas either stops producing enough insulin or the insulin it produces isn't used effectively, Morris said. Insulin is what converts the sugars into energy that people can use.

ADA lists age, weight, lack of exercise, family history of diabetes and race as factors that contribute to developing diabetes. African Americans, Native Americans, Hispanics and Pacific Islanders have a high incidence of diabetes, according to the ADA.

Galloway, part Native American, with a family history of diabetes, admits he is overweight, and did not exercise "as much as I should have on a regular basis." He is a Type 2 diabetic.

Galloway's first reaction was shock, since he knew diabetes could cause some very dangerous health problems such as blindness and liver and kidney failure, and even amputation.

"It messed me up; it depressed me," Galloway said. "It made me realize that my life is finite ... It made me wake up — I'm not 21 and bulletproof anymore."

His second reaction was to take control of his diet and exercise — losing 20 pounds since being diagnosed — and to find out as much as he could about the disease via the Internet. (ADA's web site is: www.diabetes.org.)

In addition to diet and exercise, Galloway takes a drug that slows down the absorption of carbohydrates, and he monitors his blood sugar using a small machine. All his efforts have renewed his energy and he is feeling better, Galloway said.

For those who are concerned about diabetes, Kwajalein Hospital's Nursing Service is offering a free fasting blood test, Monday, 6 - 9 a.m., on the mini-mall porch. Do not eat or drink after midnight, Morris said.

People get used to feeling bad and do not get checked for diabetes, which can be dangerous, Morris said, explaining she saw an undiagnosed diabetic wheeled into a Panama hospital in a coma.

If someone is diagnosed with diabetes, Galloway suggests, "Listen to the physicians, eat proper, exercise, take your medication and form a support group."

"My family has always been my support group," Galloway said, adding that his extended family of friends here has been great.

"When you get into a situation where something in your life is challenging that you have control over, you take control," Galloway said.

Safety emphasizing forethought at work ...

and I find the current statistics disappointing," he wrote.

A recordable injury is one for which an employee requires medical treatment other than first aid. Recordable injuries do not include off-duty injuries, which actually account for more lost work time than accidents that occur on the job, Hardin noted.

While Raytheon ended the year with a recordable injury rate of about 2.35 per 100 employees — the lowest on record here — the rate in January alone was 3.31.

"We use these measures as a gauge of our performance, but what we are truly interested in is keeping employees safe," Hardin said. "We have great safety systems in place, very committed management and employees that are truly concerned about safety, but we've slipped a little bit and its time to reenergize our efforts." He added that the injuries have hit a wide spread of departments.

For instance, one employee injured a knee after slipping while working on a piece of equipment; there have been two serious cuts, one while preparing food, the other involving a machete while tree trimming.

"Many injuries occur because employees are not paying attention to the task at hand, are not remaining aware of their surroundings or are rushing to complete tasks without considering the hazards," Hardin noted, adding that RSE Safety is meeting with managers to develop solutions.

Over the last six months, Wallace noted in his letter to employees, 86 percent of the recordable injuries have been to off-island hires versus Marshallese employees. And of those 22 injuries, 39 percent resulted in lost time at work.

This year, nine out of the 10 recordable injuries have been to off-island employees, and five of those have involved lost work time.

Hardin said he's at a loss to explain the gulf between injuries to off-island and Marshallese employees.

"It's a very surprising trend," he said. "The Marshallese are leading the way right now, setting the example."

So are individual departments. For example, the Utilities and Marine departments, large operations that are exposed to hazardous duty, have no recordable injuries so far this year. FOM, with only one injury, is also keeping pace.

"It's always been a priority — that safety is first," said Bob Babcock, Marine Department port captain. "The biggest thing we're doing is making the guys attuned to the common problems."

In other words, it's not the big projects that officials necessarily fret over, but the everyday things — strained backs or debris in the eye.

"All of our past injuries could have been avoidable," Babcock said, adding that his managers visit with employees before and after each work day about safety and health.

"We're trying to capture it on a daily basis," he explained.

Carl L'Esperance, an RSE Senior Safety engineer and Worker's Compensation specialist, added, "Safety is one of those things that becomes easier and more effective when handled as a team ...when I look out for you and you look out for me, it doesn't merely double our effectiveness, it [exponentially] increases."

Departments struggling with injuries right now include Aviation, with three injuries, and IRE Technical Management, with two injuries, Hardin said.

Rudy Gil, USAKA Ground/Explosives Safety officer, said he hasn't noticed any significant changes in the recordable injuries for the other two major contractors that he tracks — Aeromet and CIS.

Last year, CIS had six recordable injuries, while Aeromet had none, according to Gil.

This year's recordable injury goal for RSE is 1.6 per 100 employees. Hardin said it's attainable, but not at the current trend.

Concluded Wallace in the memo, "I am requesting your help to make sure we emphasize safety first in everything we do. I know we can get back on track to reduce our injury rate and become 'world class.'"

Worthy may be used as 'mobile platform' ...

effective component of the range. TRADEX operating costs will go down more with the installation of KMAR.

The improvement list will be further redefined as the range evaluates and submits proposed requirements for all the KREMS sensors for the next fiscal year.

Officials also examined other options such as replacing TRADEX with a transportable X-band sensor unit used in Theater High Altitude Area Defense testing. That was discounted for numerous reasons.

On the other hand, officials will further explore developing a dual X- and S-band radar on a mobile platform such as a ship. A mobile platform would allow the range to move the radar to ideal locations for data collection, depending on the test. That may further work to the benefit of the overall Vision 2015 plan to create a Pan-Pacific range that would encompass the radar sites in Kwajalein, Alaska and Hawaii, along with Vandenberg Air Force Base in California.

The KMRSS Worthy could be considered for the job.

"It's an existing option, but there may be something else out there," Wrenn said.

TRADEX first powered up in 1962 and was expected to run for five years, maybe 10 with upgrades, according to archives.

The latest command decision ensures that TRADEX will see 2006, after which the mobile platform option or something else within Vision 2015 may alter the KMR course.

Said Wrenn, "We're going to try to operate in consonance with our vision of the future, and what 'right' looks like then."

Dufur breaks five-minute mark in Downwind Dash

By Bob Sholar

Kwajalein Running Club

A small but speedy field showed up in 18-knot winds for the Kwajalein Running Club's annual Downwind Dash one-mile run March 5.

High school sophomore Jon Dufur used a disarmingly comfortable and loping stride in the considerable wind stream to crack the five-minute barrier, to finish in 4:58.

Only a handful of high school students have broken five minutes in 20 years of Downwind Dash history.

Actually, it was a record day for the young athlete. Earlier, Dufur had broken the Kwajalein pool record for swimming 100 meters.

All remaining runners after Dufur crossed the finish line in two minutes or less. Also well under six minutes was high school student Danny Razook, with a time of 5:37.

The first woman across was Stacy Brown, at 6:41.

Downwind Dash results:

1. Jon Dufur 4:58
2. Derek Brower 5:16
3. Brian Brewster 5:26
4. Danny Razook 5:37
5. C. J. Sorensen 5:42
6. Brian Berlind 5:44
7. David Morris 6:13
8. Gregg Ouder Kirk 6:31
9. Chris Desmarais 6:32
10. Chris Berlind 6:33
11. Stacy Brown 6:41
12. Chris Ouder Kirk 6:51
13. Michelle Demaio 6:58

Water polo season features six teams

From staff reports

Inner tube water polo is drawing a small field this year, with six teams ready to get wet and wild, beginning March 20.

Last year's A Division champs Chargogg returns as the team to beat. Other teams include Stingrays, Marco, The Inebriators, Foul Play and Undertow.

"There are a lot of new people," said Emilee Healing, Pools and Beaches supervisor. "It's a small league."

This year there is only one division, with two rounds of regular play. The season runs through May 10.

Mix and Match upsets Continental in final

From staff reports

Mix and Match pulled off the biggest upset of the volleyball season Friday night to claim the A Division crown against Continental Airlines.

Continental carried a perfect 10-0 record into the final, but took a shock early as it dropped the first game 15-9 against the coed team in its first year of existence. The odds-on favorite came back to even the game at 1-1, with a close 15-11 match. But Mix and Match poured it on in the last game, 15-4.

In a battle of .500 teams for the B-Division Championship, CMI swept In the Net 15-7, 15-10.

Treasure of Matecumbe (G)

This Disney adventure chronicles two boys' search for buried treasure somewhere in the Florida Keys during the mid 1800s. The children are assisted by three adults, who each have their own agendas for finding the cache. The hunters are followed by a greedy gang of villains. (Peter Ustinov, Jane Wyatt) (117 minutes)

Richardson Theater, 7:30 p.m.

Lucky Numbers (R, New Release)

A weatherman on a local TV station, who also sells snowmobiles on the side, is having a lousy winter, thanks to unusually warm weather. But things really start to heat up when he hatches a plot to rig the state lottery with the help of his girlfriend and his friends. The plan is foolproof — except for all the fools involved. (John Travolta, Lisa Kudrow, Ed O'Neill, Bill Pullman, Chris Kattan) (105 minutes)

Yokwe Yuk Theater, 8 p.m.

Unbreakable (New Release, PG-13)

David Dunne is taking a train ride from New York City back home to Philadelphia when the train jumps the tracks and collides with an oncoming engine, leaving David as the only survivor. In fact, not only is he alive, but he's unscathed. Puzzled, David soon encounters a mysterious stranger who tells him about "unbreakable" people who have remarkable endurance and courage. (Bruce Willis, Samuel L. Jackson, Robin Wright Penn) (107 minutes)

U.S. collecting data on Mir descent

By Gerry J. Gilmore

American Forces Press Service

WASHINGTON, March 14, 2001 — U.S. space specialists are providing Russian technicians with Mir space station positional data to help ensure the vehicle's safe splashdown in the Pacific Ocean later this month.

U.S. Space Command at Peterson Air Force Base, Colo., is now providing the tracking information through the National Aeronautics and Space Administration to the Russian Aviation and Space Agency in Moscow, said SPACECOM spokesman Air Force Maj. Perry Nouis.

"We have an observer role limited to providing data to the Russians," Nouis said. "This is actually routine for us. We've been tracking Mir since it was launched in 1986." Mir is one of 8,300 orbiting objects SPACECOM tracks daily to provide warning against possible incoming ballistic missiles, he said.

SPACECOM uses its Space Surveillance Network's ground-based radar sensors and telescopes at 19 locations around the world to track the Mir and other objects, Nouis said.

As Mir gets closer to splashdown — now estimated to occur around March 17-20, somewhere in the South Pacific between New Zealand and South America — the U.S. plans to provide hourly updates, he added.
