U.S. Army Kwajalein Atoll, Republic of the Marshall Islands

Army to celebrate 226th birthday Range to honor former president with new name

By Peter Rejcek
Associate Editor

The Kwajalein Missile Range's days are numbered. Sort of. Come June 15, KMR will be known as the Ronald Reagan Ballistic Missile Defense Test Site at Kwajalein Atoll.

"It applies to the range," said Lt. Col. Steve Morris, USAKA/KMR assistant chief of staff, Operations. "This is a significant event for Kwajalein."

The entire installation will still be called United States Army Kwajalein Atoll/Kwajalein Missile Range, according to Morris. But Building 1010 and those areas of the range command under Lt. Col. Raymond Jones now fall under the new moniker, RRBMDTS.

The name change becomes official next week to coincide with the Army's 226th birthday and adoption of the black beret (see story below).

The name change is a result of a 1999 resolution by the Republic of the Marshall Islands Nitijela, their congress, to recognize "the value of continued friendly relations" between the RMI and U.S.

Cosumano visit coincides with adoption of beret

The Army is getting a new look on its 226th birthday, and soldiers at USAKA will be among the first to sport the black beret.

Lt. Col. Steve Morris, USAKA/KMR assistant chief of staff, Operations, said personnel here will be among the first in the Army to don the black beret on the organization's 226th birthday, which falls on June 14. A full day of ceremonies is scheduled here for June 15 to coincide with stateside celebrations, according to Morris.

Lt. Gen. Joseph M. Cosumano Jr.

"There are very few units getting to don the new berets immediately," he said. "We were one of the lucky ones."

SMDC and USAKA's new commanding general, Lt. Gen. Joseph M. Cosumano Jr., will be on hand for next week's festivities, which begin at 6:30 a.m. with a Fun Run around the residential area. This will be the first visit to Kwajalein for Cosumano since he took command of SMDC and received his third star in April.

Morris said the community is invited to participate in the run, as well as attend the 10 a.m. ceremony at the Richardson Theater, where there will be an hour program in honor of the birthday, changing the name of the range (see story above) and the new berets. A military ball follows that evening at the Yokwe Yuk Club.

Cosumano will serve as guest speaker at both events.

New look

The black beret, a trademark of the U.S. Army Rangers, was chosen because it's a standard color that has been worn in the past by soldiers in several types of units, according to an Army news release. Prior to the Rangers adopting the black beret in the mid-1970s, it was worn by armor troops at Fort Knox, Ky., and by those in armored cavalry units.

In October, Army Chief of Staff Gen. Eric Shinseki said the new berets will serve as a symbol of the Army's transformation into a lighter, more mobile force.

The change has not come without some controversy, as not all soldiers agree with adopting the beret. More recently, Army officials turned away thousands of finished berets when it was discovered that they were made in China. That's one reason why many Army units will not wear the berets until after the original June 14 target date.

Morris said soldiers must attend a class to learn how to properly wear the new berets, as there is a great amount of detail involved, such

The Hourglass is heading for a mailbox near you

Summervacation means different things for different folks, but at the Hourglass it means we don't have any delivery kids. They all go off-island on vacation.

So when we began to throw around the idea to deliver to mailboxes rather than front doors, we thought about all the pros and cons. Meanwhile, the summer loomed ahead.

We decided to try it this season. If it works out, fine. If not, when school starts back up in the fall, we can go back to home delivery.

We plan to begin next Friday.

On the plus side, we can deliver the paper to every mailbox with greater assurance that we won't miss anyone. Missed homes, rain, wind, thieves (yes, people have been known to steal others' copy of the Hourglass) won't play a part. If all works out as planned we can have the paper in everyone's box by 4:30 p.m., when most folks get off work.

We know it's not as convenient, and we've heard some concern for our kids. On convenience, I can only say you'll be more assured to get a paper and as for the kids, we're not laying anyone off. We may not hire as many kids in the future, but we're not handing out pink slips, either.

I would add, when we asked you about mailbox delivery on last month's survey, those in favor and against split at 62 apiece. On the other hand, 17 said they didn't care.

Of course, home delivery was just one of several questions on that survey. One of the great things about Kwajers is their many opinions, and we asked for them. Now, let's look at some of the other results.

Apparently, the majority of you do read the paper, and a lot of it.

You weren't crazy about a weekly format and, to be honest, we weren't sure about that concept either. It's come up from time to time in different circles, but it would still involve a number of technical and logistical issues. In any case, you don't want it, and we heard you.

On coverage—too much, about right, not enough—you seem to like the amount of our news coverage and features. Some of you commented on our columnists, and we read your words with interest. We got a lot of reader support, and we got a few pointed comments. Just so you know, I was born legitimately. Thanks for asking.

We were pleased to find that you enjoy the letters to the editor and want to see more. Me too. So write in folks. A couple of you asked that we not screen so many letters. Truth be told, we may have held up to three letters in the last nine months since we started this, and two of those included personal attacks.

We also found you want more host nation type stories and travel pieces. We're pointing our reporters that way already. You probably saw the "Tips, Trips, Traps" travel column we started Tuesday. That allows you, the reader, to give the whole community ideas on travel. Just send in your ideas to prejcek@kls.usaka.smdc.army.mil.

I often compare a newspaper to a grocery store. We stock the shelves, or pages, with a little of everything, hoping you, the reader, will find something in there useful to buy, or in this case, read.

So don't let the survey end here. If you have some concerns, we welcome them. Understand we have wide-ranging readership interests to serve and limited space, so we won't be able to please everyone, all the time. But, hopefully, we'll get something on those pages you can use or enjoy.

A convoy of 10 freshly painted white vehicles, parked at the Small Boat Marina ramp, served as the backdrop for the official transfer of more than $200,000 worth of vehicles and equipment to the RMI government Wednesday afternoon.

The Commander-in-Chief U.S. Pacific Command, through the DoD Humanitarian Assistance Program Excess Property program, donated the refurbished equipment to the RMI government, said Lt. Col. Steven Beal, USAKA/KMR Host Nation chief. "CINCPAC calls it an engagement program. It's part of his plan to spread U.S. goodwill throughout the Pacific."

Col. Curtis L. Wrenn, USAKA/KMR commander, serves as the CINCPAC representative and administers CINC programs.

When a military unit declares equipment as surplus, the item is sent to the Defense Reutilization Marketing Office in Japan.

"The DRMO fixes it, they paint it and then they actually ship it out here," Beal said. "They pay all the shipping costs, so it's no cost to anyone out here. Then we turn it over [to the RMI]."

RMI Liaison Botlang Loek and Beal signed the official papers transferring the vehicles and two 40-foot containers of equipment that included tool kits, rope, ponchos, school and kitchen supplies and a generator for use on Ebeye.

Each vehicle — a 400-gallon water trailer, tractors, dump truck, flatbed trucks, utility trucks and a passenger van — sported a stenciled message indicating which government agency received it from CINCPAC.

"Working with the RMI government, determine who gets what," said Stephan Notarianni, Host Nation support officer. "It's from government to government ... The hospital got the jeep because we built a clinic for them at Gugegue and they have a hard time getting things back and forth."

The Head Start program received a passenger van, and Ebeye's utilities department received the water tank, a tractor and seven-ton flatbed truck.

"They plan to put a 5,000-gallon [portable] water tank on top of the flatbed truck," Notarianni said.

"This is going to be a big help ... we have a lot of heavy equipment to move and water for some of the areas that don't receive water from our water supply," said Tusi Faafetai, American Samoan Power Authority manager responsible for Ebeye's utilities.

as where the beret flash is located. USAKA officers and NCOs will wear the new beret at next Friday's ceremony.

A look back

Uniforms are not the only thing that has changed over the last 226 years of the Army's existence.

On June 14, 1775, the Second Continental Congress adopted the New England army besieging Boston as an American army and authorized the recruitment under congressional sponsorship of ten companies of riflemen — six from Pennsylvania and two each from Maryland and Virginia. This emerging Army provided the permanent nucleus of a force that would be supplemented by militia units from the locality in which that army was operating. Congress chose one of its own, George Washington, as commander in chief of the new Army.

The young organization soon found itself on the brink of collapse in the face of a superior British force. The well-documented 1777-

1778 winter at Valley Forge epitomized the early struggles.

But from those humble beginnings, the new Army was able to repulse the British and later overcome civilian distrust of a standing military force. As the role of the United States in world affairs changed, so did the mission of the Army. From a force charged with the "common defense" of the nation, today's Army serves not only in the field of combat, but as a peacekeeping force in far-away places like Bosnia and Kosovo, as well as assists in disaster relief and drug interdiction.

The transformation of the Army is far from over, according to Shinseki.

"Our Army is transforming to an Objective Force that will meet the challenges of the 21st century. This new force will be as lethal and survivable as our heavy forces, but also as responsive and deployable as our light forces," he said in a joint statement with Joseph Westphal, Acting Secretary of the Army.

New logo made for missile range ...

Botlang Locak, RMI liaison to USAKA, said the name was chosen for several reasons.

"It's going to be an attraction," he explained. "It's a popular name among the Marshallese."

Reagan was president when the Compact of Free Association, the document that governs relations between the two countries, went into effect.

The 106th Congress followed up the Nitjela's action by passing a bill in 2000 that redesignated the range. Rosco Bartlett, representative from Maryland, was the primary author.

"He likes renaming things after Reagan," said Jack McCreary, Kwajalein Support Directorate in Huntsville.

Accompanying the new name is a new logo and sign, which will be placed at Building 1010. The logo shows a number of elements, with the new name wrapped around the top in a semicircle.

In the center is a picture of the earth, with Kwajalein Atoll at the bottom left, Hawaii in the middle and the western half of the United States at the top right. Eleven stars circling the earth represent the 11 islands that the United States leases from the RMI. Also pictured are missiles and radars used in Theater Missile Defense and National Missile Defense testing.

"[The command] wanted to represent everything that goes on around here," explained Connie Southwell, USAKA Information Management graphics specialist who designed the logo.

At the bottom of the logo are the U.S. and RMI flags, along with the head of an eagle, the SMDC mascot.

Southwell said it took about two weeks to complete the design. "You wouldn't believe how many changes this went through," she said. "I felt honored to do it."

Next Friday's ceremony is the easy part in the name change process. Now, according to the congressional mandate, officials must ensure that any reference to the range in "any law, regulation, map, document, record or other paper of the United States" bear the new name.

Kwaj kid swimming with the big fish these days

By Barbara Johnson
Feature Writer

Brian Greene has done it again — at least he hopes so. Two years ago, he fulfilled a lifetime dream when he found what is likely a new species of fish at Kwaj. Now, the 21-year-old University of Hawaii student thinks he's found another one.

Greene, who grew up on Kwajalein and has logged some 3,000 dives since he was certified at age 12, was home for spring break in March. Diving south of SAR pass at about 100 feet, he spotted what he knew was a new fish species.

Brian Greene

"I was positive it was something different," he said. "I never expected to find a fish like it."

He chased it into a hole behind a ledge and caught it, taking it alive with him when he went back to Hawaii, where it's at a friend's house.

Scientists have two philosophies about studying fish, Greene explained. One is to keep the fish alive to study until it dies; the other is to preserve it and dissect it. Different things can be learned with each approach. Greene hopes to study it alive for a while at least.

"Now I need to find more specimens," he said. "I have been going back to the same spot, but haven't found any more yet."

The fish he found is a variety of soap fish, or Belonaperca sp. Greene described it as about four inches long and said it looks different from other fish.

Greene discovers new species while diving

A sister species to this one was discovered not long ago in Rarotonga in the Cook Islands, he said. Richard Pyle of the University of Hawaii, who found the related fish, had given Greene a picture of it, and he used it as a screen-saver on his computer. So it was somewhat of a coincidence that he found a close relative himself.

One of the first things he did when he got back to Hawaii was show pictures of the fish to scientists for their opinion. Jack Randall, biologist at the Bishop Museum and one of the foremost fish identification experts worldwide, gave him his first positive feedback, Greene said.

He also e-mailed pictures to the ichthyology department of the Smithsonian Institution in Washington, D.C., to confirm that his fish was not the same species found in Rarotonga. These responses make him pretty confident that it is another new fish species, which would be named in his honor.

Greene's theory is that this fish may normally live at about 200 to 300 feet, and because of upwelling currents in this area, the shallower habitat is much more similar to their natural habitat.

In fact, scientists think that 60 to 80 percent of reef fish below normal diving depths could be unidentified, Greene said. Currently, less than a handful of marine biologists are doing that type of research, and Greene would like to be one of them.

He is already starting to make his career dreams real.

"This fall I'll be getting training to go to 300 feet, using a mixed gas technology," Greene said.

He'll be trained through the University of Hawaii and the National Marine Fisheries Service at the Hawaii Center for Advanced Diving Techniques, which is setting up proper protocols for diving in extreme conditions.

Greene began working as a student for NMFS this year and will accompany them on expeditions to do fish population assessments and coral reef surveys and look for species of fish.

In February he traveled with a group of National Oceanic and Atmospheric Association and NMFS scientists on a coral reef ecosystem investigation program, visiting relatively unstudied areas of the Pacific, including Jarvis and Palmyra atolls and Kingman Reef.

Meanwhile, the first fish he found, the Pseudanthias sp., is still being described by scientists at the Bishop Museum.

"[Some day], I'll do the type of work they're doing, that's my goal," Greene said.

While home for his brother's graduation this month he caught several more specimens of his first discovery. Greene said he found an area near Carlos that had about 30 of them, nowhere near where the first one was found.

"This is another area with an upwelling current," he said, "which makes the shallow habitat similar to that deeper."

Now he has two females and another male of the Pseudanthias sp., and he plans to take them all back alive.

Having lived at Kwaj since he was six months old, Greene grew up in the local water. He began fish identification almost as soon as he started diving.

"I started collecting strange fish when I lived out here and contacted biologists [in Hawaii] to help identify them," he said.

After getting his degree in zoology with a focus in marine biology from UH, he plans to continue with advanced degrees in ichthyology, and it's a good bet that identifying reef fish will play a large part in whatever direction Greene chooses in his future. He said, "I'm pretty passionate about it. This is my life."

"This is my life."

Mathwig edges Sasiela in titanic tennis match

By Bruce Sinkula
Sports Writer

The Kwajalein Tennis Club's annual men's singles tournament, which started back in March, came to a conclusion Memorial Day with an exhilarating A division match-up between Kwajalein Atoll's two best players, reigning champion Rich Sasiela and challenger Jim Mathwig.

Mathwig edged Sasiela by the slightest of margins — eight points to six — in the tie-breaking game of the match to claim the men's title.

It was the 21st game of the match between the two combatants, who evenly split the 20 previous games in a match that was closely contested throughout.

In winning such a close contest, Mathwig said he felt somewhat fortunate.

"Rich played very effectively and the match was as close as it could get. But either of us could have won the last two points," Mathwig said.

Sasiela said his opponent deserved the credit for the win.

"I played very well and was very pleased with my game, but Jim played just a little bit better, and that's how it should be in a championship match," noted Sasiela, who PCS'ed from Kwajalein a couple of days later.

Langrus wins B title

In another tight match, Labtak Langrus needed a tie-breaking game to defeat Brian Berling in the Men's B division singles championship.

(Kwajalein Tennis Club's Kevin Hartnett contributed to this report.)

"Jeramon non kom" is the Marshallese way to say, "Goodbye and good luck friends."

WADE and CATHERINE JONES, with daughters TERESA and TRACY, depart June 13 on Continental.

Wade is assistant Food Services director/procurement specialist for Sodexo Marriott.

In farewell they say, "We want to thank all the BIG beautiful people who have added beauty to this island just by being here, and a special thank you to those people who have been nice to us while we were here. We will miss you, but will think of you often and fondly."

Sports major cause of injuries

By Jim Garamone
American Forces Press Service

WASHINGTON — Sports are a big part of the military culture, but apparently service members have to be more careful when they play.

Sports and recreation participation are major causes of injuries in the armed forces, said Diana Settles, program manager for injury prevention and physical fitness for the Navy.

"DoD spends $600 million to $750 million per year to treat musculoskeletal injuries," said Settles, who also works on the DoD Injury Occupational Illness Prevention Committee.

While this statistic covers all musculoskeletal disabilities, a significant number are due to sports accidents, she said.

Settles said DoD is trying to get a better handle on the scope of the problem, but that's been hard because many sports injuries occur during off-duty hours.

The effects of these injuries are far-reaching. There is, of course, the pain service members suffer. But also, injuries affect the mission.

"During Desert Shield and Desert Storm, the Army reported its medical evacuations and hospitalizations were primarily sports and recreational activities," Settles said. These injured soldiers were unavailable for duty when the war started. Other soldiers had to take their places or their fellow soldiers had to do the job with fewer personnel.

The Air Force reports that basketball is the cause of most sports injuries. It is followed by softball, flag football, snow skiing and cycling.

Basketball provides a good example of what service members can use to avoid injuries, Settles said. "Basketball is very popular and service members play the sport year-round," she said. "Pick-up games are common and they are played indoors and outdoors." Pick-up games commonly do not have referees.

Settles said service members must consider internal and external "risk factors" when approaching recreation and sports activities. Internal factors include the shape the players are in and their physical anatomies.

Using basketball as an example, it is an aerobic sport involving a lot of running. There's a level of fitness people should meet before playing the game, Settles said. The sport requires a lot of lateral movement. Players should warm-up and stretch for five to 10 minutes before taking the court. She said local morale, welfare and recreation specialists can advise service members what types of stretching are best for various sports.

Ignoring external factors can also cause accidents. In the case of basketball, such factors include the condition of the court and the proper use of players' equipment. Don't just pick up a basketball and start playing. Check out both indoor and outdoor courts to ensure they are dry and do not contain sharp or foreign objects. They should be properly lit. Make sure there is enough room behind the hoop so players don't run into a wall or go up on a curb. Wear the correct shoes when playing hoops.

"Many times people are playing basketball in running shoes," Settles said. "There is little lateral ankle support in running shoes — which predisposes the athlete to an ankle injury."

Sprains and knee injuries are the likely injuries that result from playing basketball. Every sport has internal and external risk factors, and service members who are aware of them can cut down on injuries.

DoD is trying to reach service members through their coaches, units and specialists in the recreation centers.

"The service man or woman needs to understand the internal and external risks associated with their sports," Settles said. "This could be relayed to them via coaching staff, the MWR personnel, personal training personnel or the officials. I think the 'train the trainer' is important, but the individual service man or woman has to take control and understand what the risks are with their sports and work to minimize them."

"Kom ruwainene" is the Marshallese way to say, "Welcome."

JEFF and ROSALBA WROBEL and children AMERICA and SHENANDOAH arrived recently from Mr. Helix, Calif., a suburb of San Diego. Jeff is an RSE senior software engineer.

This is the Wrobel's third tour at Kwaj. They were here in 1989-91 and 1993-95.

Jeff says, "It's great to be back here in Hawaii.

What? This is Kwajalein? I told my wife we were supposed to get off the plane at the last stop."

MARK and CHRISTY VERSTRATEN are at Kwajalein from Redstone Arsenal.

Mark is the new USAKA logistics management specialist.

They say they are "looking for a great tour here."

Army personnel and government employees took Thursday off as a chance to regroup during the command's Organization Day.

"Commands everywhere do these, and Raytheon has their Safety Day, so for us, it's a good chance to decompress," said Col. Curtis L. Wrenn Jr., USAKA/KMR commander.

The day consisted of beach volleyball in the morning, a potluck lunch around 11:30 a.m. and games for the kids in the afternoon, after school let out for the year.

But mostly, coworkers and friends simply gathered on the beach to visit outside the office.

"It's good to get together," said Sgt. 1st Class Maurice Robinson.

"The emphasis of today is fun," added Sgt. 1st Class Donnell Jones. "There's no talk about shop, here today. We're just here to relax. Then we go back to work tomorrow."

And in the USAKA versus KMR volleyball match the Range bested HQ. But in the competition for the Golden Coconut, this year a tug of war, HQ came back to take the range.
