Bid protests denied; turnover date set

By Jim Bennett

Kwajalein Range Services will assume full performance of technical and logistics services March 1, after the General Accounting Office denied protests by Raytheon and Northrop Grumman Wednesday (Kwaj time), according to Penny Russell, USAKA contracting officer representative.

Raytheon and KRS officials negotiated and the Army approved the turnover date this week following the announcement.

"KRS is very pleased with the GAO's decision and now we're ready to move forward," said Carmen Spencer, KRS president. "Our primary focus is to take care of the people and be sure we are postured to take over."

Spencer said both companies and the Army have worked in a professional manner with one another.

Raytheon's response to the news was upbeat, but also reiterated Spencer's point.

"Raytheon has everything to be proud of," said Jimmy Landress, Raytheon

Transition manager. "We have done a tremendous job over the past eight and nine years and, while we have lost, that's a part of the business, we want to leave this island with our heads held high. Consequently, we want to do our part for KRS to make the transition as smooth as possible."

According to Guy Pietrovito, the GAO attorney handling the case, the participants all have seven days to respond to have portions of the decision blacked out. The final decision will then be

Aircraft get constant, safe attention

A 1900D crashed in Charlotte, N.C., killing 21 people last week, and when news reached Kwajalein, the local aviation community took notice. After all, they send up eight to 10 flights a day in the same type of plane.

"We know everyone on that [Kwajalein] aircraft," said Richard Perry, director of maintenance.

The accident will serve as a springboard for discussion of safety matters for months to come, according to John Koehler, chief pilot. In fact, pilots meet weekly and conduct special safety meetings monthly, going over any accidents and what might be learned, "so that it won't happen here."

On the maintenance side of the house, Perry said his group reviews accident reports for maintenance issues and regularly receives maintenance com-

'Home Alone' policy includes sixth graders

By Barbara Johnson

Two major changes to USAKA's Child Supervision and Curfew Policy are being implemented on Kwajalein, effective immediately.

The first change, which could affect up to 100 fourth- through sixth-graders on Kwaj, is that children from 9 years of age through sixth grade are no longer allowed to stay home alone on a regular basis.

Under previous policy children could be home alone, based on their maturity, from the age of 9.

The Army's Child and Youth Services inspection team identified that the USAKA policy was out of date, according to Gerry Wolf, USAKA Community Services chief.

"To maintain our certification with Child and Youth Services, we have to follow their mandated procedures," he said.

According to the new policy, "children in grades kindergarten through six will not be in self-care or home alone on a regular basis during weekday, school-out, vacation and/or summer out of school time."

The policy goes on to state that these children must be adequately supervised either by their parents, the Child

Return of the Richardson reignites reminiscences

When I arrived on Kwaj two weeks ago, I was surprised and disappointed to learn that the Richardson Theater, that venerable place of entertainment and one of our oldest landmarks on island, was closed. There it was, dark and empty, on a Saturday night.

What happened? I've been told there were problems with the sound and projection systems. Well, I'm not sure exactly what the trouble is; I only want to know that it's going to be fixed and showing movies again.

The Yuk Theater, of course, has always been perfectly fine but it's indoors; it's covered, and it's not nearly as much fun.

To me, the Richardson Theater always seemed a little like the drive-in movies I went to when I was a teenager in the fifties. I had different ideas about actually watching the movie back then but the feeling for the two places is the same – they're both outdoors.

I remember one night at the Rich when the movie, Not Without My Daughter starring Sally Field, was playing. We were about halfway through when it started to rain. Umbrellas snapped open and the rest of us, who didn't have the foresight to bring umbrellas or rain gear, ran to the overhang in the back.

The movie was so compelling, no one left. So there we stood, huddled together, shoulder to shoulder under that small canopy. I had read the book so I knew perfectly well what the ending was going to be, but I stayed anyway.

The rain came crashing down, sometimes sideways with the wind blowing. We could barely see the screen. Still, no one moved. Eventually the rain stopped, we drifted back to our seats and at movie's end, we got on our bikes and slowly made our way home through the puddles.

Even if a movie turned out to be boring, I liked to slide down in my seat, rest my head back and look at the stars: the Milky Way, the Big Dipper, Orion the Hunter (don't be impressed; that's the extent of my astronomy).

I understand that in February, the Rich will reopen. And even if I'm not here to enjoy it, it's nice to know that movies, once again, will be playing to audiences for years to come.

Sgt. Justin made impact on soldiers worldwide

By Spc. Casandra Brewster

FORT BELVOIR, Va. — On Christmas morning in Greene, N.Y., instead of opening gifts, Justin Bryce died. With his death, the Army lost a good soldier.

He was a soldier's soldier. A hero among heroes. And he was only 10 years old.

"Sgt. Justin," as he was lovingly dubbed by his Army family, fought an arduous battle with liver cancer. The cancer spread to his brain, but not before he had fulfilled a life-long desire to become a soldier. In early October the Army and the Make-A-Wish Foundation joined forces to help make Justin's wish come true.

For just three short days, one of which was spent here at Fort Belvoir, Justin was a soldier. He was enlisted in the Army by top brass at the Pentagon and promoted to sergeant by Sgt. Maj. of the Army Jack Tilley. He was a natural-born leader, assuming the command of a "top-secret mission" which recovered "sensitive and classified" equipment and information.

"Let's move out!" he commanded, just moments after being briefed on his mission. And before the day was over, he easily responded with the Army's traditional, tried-and-true positive answer of "Hooah!"

During his tour of duty, Justin managed to be awarded a Meritorious Service Medal and collected a couple of dozen challenge coins from every leader he met. Additionally, he was loaded down with certificates of appreciation and achievement, plaques and other keepsakes from his Army "career."

He also took away a piece of everyone's heart who met and dealt with him that day. He certainly made me blink back a few tears. Additionally, he made me extra proud to wear U.S. Army across my chest. To think that this child could have literally chosen to do anything with his dying wish: go to Disneyland, take a cruise with his family or anything else his heart desired. But he wanted to be a freedom fighter he told me when he was here.

Justin followed in the footsteps of his eldest brother, Pfc. Raymond Bryce, who is assigned to Battery E, 7th Field Artillery Regiment at Fort Drum, N.Y. During their visit to Belvoir, Sgt. Justin's mother, Mary Bryce, said she wasn't completely convinced that Raymond's career choice was the absolute reason Justin chose his Make-A-Wish wish. However, she said she was proud of both of her "soldiers."

"Besides, soldiers get to do cool things and they get such awesome equipment," Justin said.

You know what, sergeant, you're absolutely right!

Sgt. Justin embodied the teaching spirit of any good Army noncommissioned officer, too. He taught me quite a few things during our short shared tour of duty together.

Besides giving me that added sense of pride in being a soldier, he taught me that our missions are crucial to the entire nation. That without the Army so many dreams, wishes and desires would never have an opportunity to come true. Sgt. Justin taught me that even the smallest person can have a big impact.

10-year-old sergeant loses battle, wins hearts

by Spc. Chuck Wagner
Army News Service

FORT MYER, Va. — The headstone will be inscribed "Sgt. Justin Bryce," even though the dates will show he was much too young to enlist.

His teary-eyed mother's description of him explains how a 10-year-old deserved every chevron.

"He was a brave little boy. It didn't matter what struggle he had to go through, he just faced them. I think the way he used to look at it was that no matter how tough life seems, you can still overcome everything. And he always had a smile," said Mary Bryce from the family's Grene, N.Y. home.

Justin knew something about struggles. He spent months battling liver cancer, which spread and wracked his small body.

Justin's request to the Make-A-Wish foundation was to outrank his brother, Pvt. Raymond Bryce of 10th Mountain Division, Fort Drum, N.Y. Secretary of Defense Donald Rumsfeld told the Army to make it happen.

Over a few blustery November days, Justin enlisted and was promoted at the Pentagon, climbed around inside an opulent limousine on his way to Fort Belvoir where he shot an M-16 with night-vision goggles and commanded an M-111 personnel carrier. Near day's end, the Army whisked him over Washington aboard a Blackhawk in a last-minute, unscheduled flight because soldiers heard him ask, "Can I fly in a helicopter?"

He rested that evening looking out

Sgt. Justin Bryce made the most of his time as a soldier during his visit to the Pentagon and Fort Belvoir, Va., in October, over Baltimore Harbor aboard a Coast Guard ship. Ships, you see, were another of Justin's passions.

"Even up to a couple of days before, he was still calling himself sergeant," his mother said.

Justin, unresponsive over Christmas Eve, died at home Christmas day surrounded by the entire extended family.

Scores of friends visited him during calling hours on Dec. 28. Six National Guard soldiers from a local armory took turns standing vigil for four hours. The family dressed Justin in the battle dress uniform issued to him and hung his ID tags around his neck. His mother shined his boots.

Services were held for the family the next day. Justin's formal burial is planned in spring.

Instead of seeing Disney World, Justin had asked to join the Army family. His mother says he quickly realized how the Army takes care of its own.

More than 40,000 people have logged on the Web site www.caringbridge.org/ny/justinbryce, to read about Justin and leave messages for him and his family. Many of the messages, as well as hundreds of e-mails to his mother, are from service members. More arrive every day.

"Sgt. Justin, keep fighting and it was my honor to get to know you and my pleasure to serve with you in the Army," wrote 1st Sgt. Lee Branham before Christmas.

"May God give you strength to carry on each passing day. God Bless You," Staff Sgt. Gerald Canada wrote to the family after Justin's funeral.

His mother prints out e-mailed letters from service members to put in Justin's keepsake book, which is bulging with notes, autographs, and pictures of a proud, bald, freckled sergeant surrounded by his Army buddies.

"It touches my heart. You guys are very, very caring. Justin picked the right group of people," Mary said.

Rumsfeld: Saddam Hussein will decide war or peace

By Jim Garamone
American Forces Press Service

WASHINGTON — "The choice between war and peace will not be made in Washington, or indeed in New York," Defense Secretary Donald H. Rumsfeld said today. "It will be made in Baghdad, and the decision is facing the Iraqi regime."

The fact that the inspectors have not yet come up with new evidence of Iraq's weapons of mass destruction program could itself be evidence of Iraq's noncooperation, Rumsfeld said during a Pentagon news conference.

He said the Iraqi government has designed weapon programs with denial and deception in mind. The programs can continue even as inspections progress. He stated the burden of proof is on Iraq to prove it is disarming and to show U.N. inspectors where the weapons are.

"It is not the responsibility of U.N. inspectors to find the weapons," he said. "It is not their duty nor do they have the ability to find weapons of mass destruction hidden in a vast country."

The United States stands ready to provide U-2 surveillance aircraft to the U.N. inspectors and has shared intelligence with them. Rumsfeld said the United States believes that U.N. inspectors should take Iraqi scientists and their families out of the country for questioning. That proved successful in the past, and he believes it would be the case today.

Still, President Bush has not made a decision on conflict with Iraq, and the United States continues to hope that Saddam Hussein "will change course and that Iraq will disarm peacefully and voluntarily. No one wants war," Rumsfeld said.

The secretary said the situation is a test for the United Nations adding the credibility of the organization is at stake.

School calendar tops advisory council agenda

By Barbara Johnson

Feature Writer

The proposed 2003-2004 school calendar looks a lot like this year's, said Karen Ammann, school superintendent, presenting the calendar for review at Wednesday night's School Advisory Council meeting.

"It's very similar to this year," Ammann said.

"We don't have a lot of give and take in the calendar," she said, explaining that they have a required 180 school days, seven teacher work days, and they try to make the four quarters balanced at about 45 days each.

The flexibility is in the Christmas vacation and spring break, she said, and the proposed calendar only varies from this year's by a day or two.

If this calendar is adopted, school will begin Aug. 22, 2003, and end June 11, 2004.

Copies of the calendar will be in the library and school office, and the community is invited to comment to the SAC, the school administration or the calendar committee members, Barbara Bicanich, Bonnie Oyamoto, Lynn Booth and Gina Bennett.

The calendar will be discussed at next month's SAC meeting.

Also, in response to parent requests, the SAC discussed the possibility of the schools providing uniforms for sports teams instead of the current system of students buying their own. Steve Howell, junior/senior high school principal, looked into uniform costs and reported that, estimating about 280 students involved and including lettering and numbering and shipping, costs could be close to $9,000 to $10,000. He said that all students who sign up are put on a team and get to play, so the number of students participating can change.

Besides the cost, Howell said another downside is that students like to keep their uniforms, and even if they pay for them, uniforms have to be reordered each year.

Another option for uniforms is to have the Retail department order shirts for the teams and have students buy them at a nominal cost of $10 to $13.

Parent and SAC member Ann Cohen said that under the current system, uniforms can cost as much as $70 for each sport, and it's a hardship for some families. Also, she added, some uniforms don't arrive until close to the end of the season.

Ammann said she would contact the Retail department for information and get a committee together, including some students, to look into uniforms.

The discussion will be continued at the next meeting.

Staffing

The elementary school has seen some recent staffing changes. Sonya Sava, who was at School-Age Services, has taken Vernona Gardner's kindergarten class since Gardner PCSed, and Kristin Mullins, who recently received her master's degree in education, is transitioning into Brandi Brewster's first-grade class.

Ammann said both of these replacements are working very well, and the school is lucky to find such qualified replacement teachers.

Surveys went out this week to all school staff to ask who would be returning next year in order to recruit for next year, Ammann said, adding that teacher decisions could change based upon what the new contract and salaries look like.

In other business

Current elementary school enrollment is 198, Ammann said, and the school expects to both lose a few and gain a few students in the upcoming weeks, probably keeping the numbers close to the same.

Report cards go home to elementary parents Jan. 23. Junior/senior high school report cards will be mailed home Jan. 25.

New curricula

The drafts are completed for the new K-12 language arts and grades 7-12 industrial arts curricula for next year, said junior/senior high school principal Steve Howell. Copies will be placed in the faculty workrooms, sent to volunteer parents and presented at a public meeting in February.

They should be ready for the first reading at the School Advisory Council meeting in March or April, he said. The committee is also investigating educational materials to support the curricula, and the public is welcome to look at those as well, Howell said.

Drivers' ed

At the next SAC meeting, Feb. 19, the council will discuss drivers' education.

KRS HR officials will call new hires to create files ...

written, published and posted online at www.gao.gov, though Pietrovito couldn't say exactly when. If you are searching the GAO site, the Kwajalein contract protest number is B-291506.

The news hit the island Wednesday morning, most getting the word via e-mail to Raytheon employees and others by word-of-mouth to the rest of the island.

Spencer said KRS has firm commitments from 85 percent of the vacant job positions on-island and at CONUS facilities. Over the next four weeks, company human resources officials will call new employees for one-on-one meetings to fill out necessary paperwork and establish employee files. The company will also finish hiring for dependent hire, formerly on-island, positions and continue "an aggressive off-island hiring to meet the critical technical areas we need to fill," Spencer said.

In other areas, the financial enterprise transition effort continues, as well, and inventories have "gone exceptionally well with great cooperation," Spencer said.

Those not staying, however, are packing up and out. Packing and Crating will perform 48 pack-outs in January with 39 set for February, "and more to come every day," said Alan Uda, Packing and Crating supervisor.

"It's pretty hectic, but somehow we have to do it," he said, adding his department is now working six-day weeks.

Continental Travel has not yet noticed a large departure, according to Manager Yvonne Duarte, but they're monitoring seat availability for the next six weeks.

"This is going to be quite an orchestration, but a lot of people have already left, so I don't think it will be a mass exodus," Duarte said.

Duarte said she expects 200 to 300 departures, including contract workers and dependents, over the next six weeks, something that is doable with the existing number of commercial and military flights scheduled. She added she has heard no word at this time of a munications from aircraft manufacturers and users, alike, around the world. Some indicate things to look at, others direct immediate action, but Perry said they take them all seriously.

Flight crews follow strict procedures before take-off ...

Around 50 workers commute every day to Roi-Namur aboard the 1900Ds, flying on one of the four flights every workday morning, said Faith Fullerton, Roi-Namur Airport supervisor and manifestor. And that doesn't count the two additional flights on Wednesdays, Fridays and Saturdays or the additional 10 or so every day that fly up for fill-in or specific project work on the northern island.

The plane carries up to 19 passengers and two crew.

The process for safe air travel on Kwajalein begins in Perry's shop, where mechanics inspect each plane scheduled to fly. A separate quality control group follows with a separate inspection. If the plane passes both inspections, crews prep it for flight. But in either case, the inspector has the power to ground a plane if he or she has a concern.

"If they're going by the book, no one will question them," Perry said.

That happened Wednesday, when a mechanic spotted a tiny puddle. The puddle turned out to be a routine matter, a small, non-threatening leak easily fixed, but for safety's sake, the plane sat grounded for 48 hours.

Prior to every take-off, pilots perform their own pre-flight checks to ensure the plane is air-worthy.

Aviation investigators in North Carolina reportedly have questioned the load carried by the crashed 1900D, and that brings up an issue with Koehler and Perry. Local aviation officials ask that passengers check in any baggage such as dive gear or suitcases 30 minutes prior to the flight. That allows the flight teams to weigh the baggage and load it properly and safely.

"We always say that we may not get your bags up there on the same plane with you, but they will get up there," Koehler said.

Passengers might note that the ground crew hands the pilots a clipboard before take-off. That clipboard holds the weight allowance report and passenger manifest. The pilot then compares the report to fuel levels and weight, and determines if it all fits within safe parameters.

The pilot has the final say on whether or not a plane is safe to fly, Koehler said.

Koehler added that pilots have noticed some passengers not wearing seatbelts. With the plane landing at between 120 and 130 mph, he stressed the importance of the belts.

Besides the day-to-day safety measures, the department last summer brought in factory trainers for the 1900D from Wichita, Kan., adding to the experience already present in the department.

Most pilots hold military pilot experience and all have thousands of hours.

Maintenance crews also hold years of experience. Scot Dunlavy, for example, came to the maintenance department in 2001 after working for years with Great Lakes Aviation on 1900s. On the other hand, Philip Harry, of Ebeye, has worked at Aviation since 1979, but said the transition to the 1900Ds was made easy by the fact that the engines are from the same Pratt and Whitney family as those on the Dash-7s, the previous aircraft used.

Said Perry, "We have as safe an aircraft as anywhere."

chartered flight.

Meanwhile, KRS cut its first paychecks as a company, issuing wages to four high school students who worked for the company in data entry.

Spencer presented Krystle McAllister, Mallory Smith, Sara Barrs and Stephanie Berling with T-shirts, while Community Services Manager Joe Marshall handed out the actual checks Thursday at the junior/senior high school.

Spencer said he hired the youths rather than bring out temporary help from San Francisco to save money and because the young people are already trained in computers, better than many adults. Marshall added that around 270 part-time and casual jobs — sports referees and scorekeepers, for example — will be open to dependent applicants, youthful and otherwise, in Community Services alone.

Parents receive policy paper ...

Development Center including School-Age Services, a certified family child care provider, or an authorized baby sitter, or they may be enrolled in a Youth Center program.

Children in grades seven to nine may be in self or monitored care as determined by the parents, according to the policy. If they are in self care, they need to be able to follow an emergency and fire evacuation plan. Also, parents need to provide an emergency point of contact, the policy states.

"We are sending the policy to all elementary parents," Ammann said, adding, "We're not involved in enforcement, just in giving out the information." As always, if school staff suspect abuse or neglect they are required to report it, she said.

"For us, it's so all parents know that this is the expectation of the command," Ammann said.

Trina Tiffany, CDC director, said she also plans to distribute this information to parents in her program.

The other new requirement in the policy is that baby sitters must be 13 and in at least seventh grade. This is up from the age of 12 under the old policy. Additionally, as in past policies, baby sitters must attend the CDC baby-sitter training class.

Also, as before, children should not be left in the care of a baby sitter 13 to 17 years of age for more than 12 hours, and children under the age of 15 cannot be left alone overnight.

Parents who would like to find out more information about the School-Age program can call Tiffany at the CDC. She also has a list of people who have taken the baby-sitter training course at CDC. This training includes infant/child CPR, basic first aid and proper caregiver techniques. The next course will be given sometime this spring, she said.

"What's important about the policy is that it is the parents' responsibility to arrange for the care and supervision of their children," Wolf added.

It also states, "Enforcement of the policy is primarily parental with the assistance of the law enforcement contractor."

Questions about the new policy should be directed to USAKA Community Services at 53371.

Bowling alley game goes global

If you want to win that vacation voucher, you'll have to get by Jakester 2 at Elmendorf Air Force Base or Paulsnip at New Bavaria, Ohio.

That's the beauty of the new Tournamaxx video game at the bowling alley. The game is linked to other such machines at military installations around the world, said Paul Fritz, Retail Services manager.

Installed last Saturday, the machine offers such games as Boxxio, where a player picks and eliminates squares in color groups, and 11-Up, a card game where the player tries to score points based on sets of cards adding up to, but not more than 11, to name a few games.

Fritz rescued the broken machine from the Yuk Club, rebuilt the hardware and installed the Tournamaxx software. With the help of Information Technology, the game went online.

New players must enter a login name and password, and Kwajers have already posted scores in the top 100. Top scorers for the monthly tournament game, which varies from month to month (11-up next month), win vacation vouchers to resorts, basketball backboards, chairs, T-shirts and hats.
