Temporarily entranced, the high-pitched cacophony of voices ceased when Kwajalein Public Gardens nursery coordinator Amy Storey held up the two potted Eranthemums the first-graders were getting ready to plant in the gardens in commemoration of Earth Day on Monday.

Earth Day, now 33 years old, is the brainchild of then U.S. Senator Gaylord Nelson, Democrat from Wisconsin. Nelson, an environmentalist before it was fashionable according to the Environmental Education for Kids! Web site, "believed that environmental problems needed national attention."

Teach-ins by students opposed to Vietnam War, gave Nelson an idea, according to EEK!

"Suddenly, the idea occurred to me," he said. "Why not have a teach-in on the environment?"

The first Earth Day was a resounding success with thousands of schools organizations and 20 million people taking part.

This year, across the United States during the entire month of April, cities, town, schools and organizations are sponsoring Earth Day events from New York's Earth Fair Day to Oakland, California's Naturally Funny Comedy Show and Portland, Maine's Our Places in Urban Spaces.

On Kwajalein, 30 first-graders learned about the environment, plants and recycling in class the past two weeks in preparation for Earth Day.

"Basically we talked about things that we could do to save the earth," said Kristin Mullins, first-grade teacher for 16 of the students crowded around Storey. "For example, by turning off water when we brush our teeth, we save up to five gallons of water."

SARS raises travel guidance

By Jim Bennett

The effects of SARS are being felt on Kwajalein, though no cases have been reported.

The command and prime contractor, Kwajalein Range Services, have established travel recommendations in response to the contagious virus that has claimed 263 lives worldwide, according to the World Health Organization.

"It's in the news and we know we have people here who travel to Asia," said Dr. John Janikowski, of Kwajalein Hospital. "If they were to

POWs get help with repatriation

From American Forces Press Service

WASHINGTON — It's going to take more than returning Pfc. Jessica Lynch to the United States for her to get back to a normal life.

Much the same could be said about the seven prisoners of war — her five unit comrades and two pilots — rescued April 13.

After spending eight days in Iraqi captivity and a nearly equal amount of time recuperating at Landstuhl Regional Medical Center in Germany, Lynch returned to the United States on April 12.

However, while she continues her recovery at Walter Reed Army Medical Center in Washington, it may take some time before she returns emotionally, emphasized Gary Percival, a psychologist with the Joint Personnel Recovery Agency.

The agency, a subordinate command of the U.S. Joint Forces Command, assists both recovered U.S. service members and other affected personnel through a comprehensive repatriation process.

The process includes physical and psychological care; debriefings; de-

Students query the colonel on birds, TV and pets

Dear Col. Brown,

People shouldn't throw rocks at Pacific Golden Plovers and I want a sign put up for them. They use Pacific Golden Plovers as targets to throw rocks at. A Pacific Golden Plover is a living thing so throwing a rock at it is like throwing a rock at a person. If someone throws a rock at it, it will hurt them, frighten them, and if it frightens them enough, kill them. Pacific Golden Plovers are important because they eat pests that annoy us. So, if you put the sign up, maybe there will be less pests on Kwajalein.

ming, including cartoons and children's shows. And, yes Giordan, I like to watch television, too.

Dear Col. Brown,

We should be able to have other pets on Kwajalein other than cats and dogs. We should do this because some people are allergic to them and they want pets that they are not allergic to. We only have animals like cats, dogs and fish, but people want interesting animals like rabbits or guinea pigs. I know you don't want other animals here because you don't want animal diseases or animal abuse. I think you could have the same rules that people follow for cats and dogs. You could tell people that if they wanted one of these interesting animals, they would have to spay or neuter it. They would also have to give it the right medical treatment. Having other pets on Kwajalein would make people happy.

— Julie Alves [Fourth Grade]

Dear Hannah,

Your concern for the Pacific Golden Plover shows wisdom beyond your years. Only uninformed individuals would throw rocks at these beautiful birds and only education—not signs—will change their behavior. Have the courage to ask anyone you see throwing rocks to please stop. It is against the law. If they don't, tell them I said it's okay to tell your teacher and parents.

Fear Factor, Bachelor and Bachelorette. Adults could use cable to see other shows. Kids like cable so much because of the Cartoon Network, and they also like it because it runs 24/7 with a lot of different cartoons. Kids love it and adults love it. No one wants to travel all the way to the States to see cable. We'll only get to see cable once, during summer. Everyone loves cable, you probably even love cable. So, I want you to get cable, and put it on another channel.

— Giordan Harris [Fourth Grade]

Dear Col. Brown,

I think we should get cable TV. Adults have mostly all the TV shows they like. A lot of adults like TV shows like Survivor,

Dear Julie,

I appreciate your interest in allowing pets other than cats and dogs on Kwajalein, and agree with you. Unfortunately, if we allowed additional varieties of pets, we would have to reduce the number of cats and dogs allowed, which are the most popular pets.

More importantly, we limit the pet population to cats and dogs on Kwajalein to ensure a safe and healthy environment, because our local veterinary office is not equipped or staffed to provide medical care to a wide variety of pets. That inability would be harmful to the pets and could contribute to disease. The current variety and limits promote a healthy and manageable environment.

Thank you for your question and please continue to ask questions you feel benefit our community.

Dear Giordan,

Thank you for asking this question and giving me the chance to assure the entire community that we are actively working the project to add television channels.

We completed about 70 percent of our preliminary design review in late March. Now, we have requested frequency authorization through the State Department. I expect a 90-120 day turn-around on this.

After we complete several other requirements that involve satellite links, transmitters, more tests, etc., we will enjoy a much wider variety of program-

Airlines prescribe 40-pound weight loss

By KW Hillis
Associate Editor

Most airlines, including Continental, reduced the maximum weight of check-in bags from 70 pounds to 50 pounds each for travel within the United States.

Although military travelers may get a waiver to carry up to 70 pounds, according to Air Mobility Command Public Affairs Office, all travelers headed for the U.S. should be aware of the change since fees for excess poundage is steep.

AMC, ATI, Aloha and Continental Micronesia Airlines are still loading 70 pound bags with no extra charge when flying to and from Kwajalein to Honolulu, said Donna Groth, Terminal supervisor.

Military members — active duty, Guard, Reserve and Coast Guard — if on official travel, are being offered waivers by commercial airlines, but will have to pay additional fees for bags over 70 pounds. The airlines will not accept bags over 100 pounds, according AMC Public Affairs office. The waivers are not available for family members or Defense Department civilians even if on official business. How much of each bag's weight or number of bags waived also depends on the airline.

AMC officials and local travel officials recommend calling the airline or accessing the carrier's Web site for baggage limitations.

There has been some confusion since the commercial airlines have reduced the bag weight limit over the past few months.

"We came back from Hono to Kwaj on Continental," said Yvonne Duarte, Continental Travel City Ticket Office manager. "They were making people take things out of their luggage and not allowing anymore than 50 pounds per bag."

The confusion was cleared up when Continental issued their new policy April 15, allowing 70 pounds for international flights and domestic flights on the same itinerary, Groth said.

"Kwajalein is considered international and would still have the 70-pound limit without incurring excess charges," wrote Beth Mohr, Continental customer care manager in an e-mail to the Hourglass. "Customers will not be charged on domestic portions of an international itinerary."

If the travel is booked all at once with the itinerary showing international travel, then most airlines, including Continental, allow travel to the final destination without an additional charge for 70 pound bags, she said. One problem comes up when travelers leave Kwajalein with 70-pound bags and the itinerary doesn't show international travel. That might occur if the U.S. portion of the trip was booked separately, or the traveler flew aboard an AMC or ATI flight to Hono. The traveler is then left with either taking the excess items out of the bags or paying the fee.

Continental Travel City Ticket Office is recommending that people only take 50 pound bags so they don't run into trouble at the airport, Duarte said.

"You will have to get rid of 20 pounds per bag unless you are willing to pay the excess," she said. "And it is not a small fee."

Whether the traveler is military or civilian, the excess baggage charges depend on the airline. American Airlines, according to its Web site, charges $25 per bag over 50 pounds and $50 for bags over 70 pounds, while some airlines charge up to $80 a bag if over 70 pounds.

"It would be cheaper to mail," Duarte added.

Rustman triathlon takes Kwajalein streets Monday

From Staff Reports

The training is over and the athletes are primed for the 24th annual Rustman triathlon.

The starting gun goes off at 4 p.m. The course will take participants on a 1-kilometer swim from Echo Pier to Emon Beach; a 26-kilometer bike ride from Emon Beach to Lagoon Road, on to the runway loop for six laps and back to the beach. Participants will then run 10-kilometers in three laps around a circle through housing along Ocean Road to the airport and back along Lagoon Road.

Spectators are welcome anywhere along the course, but the majority gather at Emon Beach. This year, for the first time, the Kwajalein Amateur Radio Club will send Ham television to the beach from other spots on the course.

compression time; and helps with family, organization and unit reunions. Media awareness training is also provided, as well as support for families, Moulton said.

For most detainees a key component of repatriation is dealing with the trauma that comes with being held against one's will — to get them "back into their jobs and back into society, back into their family," Percival said.

He said that Lynch, who has seen a JPRA psychologist during her recovery, will need support while reintegrating into society and regaining a sense of normalcy in her life.

"When you first come out of a captivity situation or an isolation event, you're probably going to have nightmares, sleep disturbances and some fear reactions," Percival said.

"This is a normal response to what has happened to you," he added, but it's treated "as normal people adjusting to an abnormal event."

JPRA also has cognizance over the training, doctrine, and inter-agency coordination that facilitate the recovery of military personnel and other personnel who are POWs or hostages.

The agency also handles peacetime governmental detainees, such as the Navy EP-3 crew held in China for 11 days in April 2001. The Navy reconnaissance aircraft and its 23-member crew was forced to land on China's Hainan Island after it survived a mid-air collision with a Chinese jet fighter.

When a service member is missing in action or is captured, the first act is to immediately report the incident and then locate the individual, said Col. Randy Moulton, JPRA commander. He noted the agency also assists combatant commanders with supporting individuals in captivity.

Once the individual is located, recovery planning begins immediately to return the service member to safety. "That's where repatriation comes in," he added.

"The goal of repatriation is to ensure the successful reintegration of the service member both professionally and personally," Moulton explained.

Since her rescue, Lynch has been under the care of a specially trained mental health professional, called a SERE psychologist. That acronym (pronounced "seer") stands for survival, Former POW Spc. Shoshona Johnson is carried to an ambulance on her way to care in the states; care that takes on three-phases to help her recover from the physical and psychological trauma of captivity.

evasion, resistance and escape.

About 30 SERE psychologists in the military help recovering detainees through a three-phase repatriation process.

The initial receipt and recovery stage occurs when detainees are brought back into a safe area, according to Percival. There they are treated medically, and if healthy enough, debriefed about their captivity "to learn of time-sensitive information that will protect lives."

The second phase is focused on what's referred to as "decompression time." There detainees are given at least 72 hours "to put their lives together before they go out and face the world," he noted.

This phase gives them "time to come to grips with what has occurred and gives them a chance to tell someone what happened," he added.

Percival said the final phase is the most critical: when detainees are transferred home or to their home installation.

During this phase the detainee receives ongoing medical care and more debriefings. They also have the opportunity to meet with family and prepare for the possibility of political and public attention, including the media.

"Typically detainees don't know what to tell their family, or how to talk with them. The families may want to overwhelm them," he explained. "But you have to give them time to come to grips with what happened. They are a lot healthier in the long run if you give them that time to decompress."

Percival said that families, military commanders, the media and politicians should understand that detainees need time to readjust to life.

"Everybody wants to do what they think is best for the detainee, but what they think is the best is often times harmful," Percival explained.

He said that detainees should be allowed to make their own choices, to be able to "predict and control" what happens in their lives.

"If you think about someone who has been isolated — that has been in a situation where they have no ability to predict and control, where they have someone tell them when to go to the bathroom, when to eat, when to lie down, when to sleep — sometimes well-wishers put them in that same position," he said.

Percival noted that Lynch may already be in that position. Her life is already being put under control, her future planned.

In Lynch's hometown of Palestine, W. Va., parades and celebrations are being anticipated. And reportedly she's been offered financial assistance to attend college, as well as a teaching job once she graduates. In addition, one network is already negotiating a television movie about her ordeal.

With her medical ongoing treatment and repatriation process, Lynch has had no public appearances to date.

However, on April 17, Walter Reed issued a statement on her behalf. In it, she expressed well-wishers should send cards and letters in lieu of gifts and flowers to her in care of Walter Reed Army Medical Center, 6900 Georgia Ave. N.W., Washington, D.C., 20307-5001.

How each detainee deals with the return home is an "individual process," what's best for him or her, Percival said.

JPRA's repatriation process provides support and follow-up up to a year, he noted. "We owe it to them."

First-graders plant shrubs for Kwaj, Earth ...

First-grade teacher Diane Hamill said her students have been studying plants for the past two weeks so this was a perfect field trip for them.

Monday, clad in plastic raincoats and some in makeshift plastic bags, each student took turns at digging a hole and planting a shrub at Kwajalein Public Gardens. At first totally focused on the process of digging, placing the plant and patting the soil down, a few of the children quickly became interested in the large banana spiders on a nearby tree.

The rain didn't deter the Earth Day event; in fact, the teachers were as enthusiastic as the children about the outing.

"My class is studying weather at the end of the week, so this is good," Mullins said. "We'll be talking about rain and the water cycle."

What have the children learned about the environment?

"I learned that we could plant plants at home," said 7-year-old Roselia Lojkar. "Me and my Mom planted yesterday. She is a good planter."

Some of the children already knew about recycling.

"We learned that recycling would crush things down," said 7-year-old John Sholar. "I already knew that. It is one of my chores. I take out the recycling."

Once the shrubs were planted, Mullins and Hamill told the students to bring their family to the Gardens to see how the plants have grown in a few months.

"You have done something good for what day?" Mullins said.

"Earth Day," said the enthusiastic chorus.

SARS and other world events affect travel ...

bring SARS back here, that could be devastating to us."

Under the policy, military and DoD personnel may not travel to China, Hong Kong, Singapore or Vietnam, for any reason.

Contractors have suspended all official travel to those countries.

USAKA and KRS officials discourage any vacations to these countries, but officials are recommending that those who go anyway remain off-island for 10 days after leaving the listed foreign country and before returning to Kwajalein.

According to the Centers for Disease Control, SARS carries a two- to 10-day incubation period.

Furthermore, the returning resident must have some documentation from a doctor that they have no evidence of SARS.

"We don't expect a large number of cases so we'll be handling the documentation on an individual basis," Janikowski said. "Our point is to protect the community."

The hospital likely won't have many

Where to go:

China, Hong Kong, Singapore and Vietnam are listed on the CDC list for SARS.

cases, according to Yvonne Duarte, Continental Travel City Ticket Office manager. Duarte said she's seeing about a 30 percent drop in travel from this time last year. "The economy, the world situation, the war and now SARS, there's not a lot of travel right now," she said. People are now starting to make summer travel plans with the transition to the new prime contractor complete. And as people start to make summer travel plans, Asia isn't on most itineraries, she said.

"We had a few who were going to go to Asia," Duarte said, adding they've since canceled.

The majority of those traveling this summer, primarily school teachers and families, are going back to the states.

The policy does put USAKA in line with neighboring countries.

The RMI refused two Chinese nationals entry to Majuro last week as part of their new travel ban on people coming to the RMI from China, Hong Kong, Singapore, Vietnam and Toronto, Canada, according to a report by the Marshall Islands Journal.

The Federated States of Micronesia issued a similar order April 7.

Toronto is not on USAKA's list, as the nature of the illness in that area is still in dispute, Janikowski said. But the list could grow to include Toronto or additional countries if they show up on the CDC or WHO list of SARS nations.

"People should be aware of when they're traveling, especially if it's close to one of these countries," Janikowski said.

The doctor added people can check the CDC and WHO Web sites for up-to-date information on SARS.

Said Janikowski, "The push is on to try and make sure this can be contained before it spreads to the point where it is as common as the common cold."

'Castaway' children learn about lost souls

By Dan Adler
Graphics Editor

After three months of rehearsals, 37 George Seitz students performed the musical, "The Castaways," Thursday night in the MP room.

Teri King, a George Seitz Elementary School teacher, choreographed and co-directed the production with Cheryl Shields.

King had previously put on the play with her students in Iowa City, Iowa.

"I just wanted to do it out here again" she said. "The children learn so much from it."

Karen Ammann, school superintendent, agreed, saying, "It makes the children more socially aware. Most Kwaj children have never seen a homeless person."

Ammann added the classes are studying immigration and the musical fits well with that coursework.

"The Castaways," a musical play by Michael and Jill Galina, is not about Gilligan-type lost souls at sea, but it is about lost souls.

As the play opens, Courtney, played by Cornellia Notarianni, is a present day middle-schooler having parent problems.

"I've had it", she says. "My parents are constantly on my back about everything. My report card is bad, my room's a mess."

She's determined not to go home and may take off on her own. Her friends attempt to talk her into going home and forget such a foolish idea as running away.

The children's music teacher, Mrs. Davis, played by Andrea Morrison, gathers them around and tells them the story of her grandmother, Willamina "Willie," played by Katie Fogg. Willie, at the age of 13, is the oldest in a terribly poor immigrant family in turn of the century New York City, when she leaves home in search of a better life.

What Willie finds is hardship, danger and hunger. She falls in with a group of fellow child castaways and together they try to survive being homeless and alone.

They evade the police and agents of the Children's Society because they are afraid of being sent to jail and having the key thrown away.

The group ekes out a meager living by selling newspapers and shining shoes. They resist the lure of dishonest money offered by a character called Slippery Sam Slattery, played by Nick Morgan, saying, "We may be beggars, but we ain't thievin' liars."

In the end, the children are starving in the coldest New York winter in 20 years. To save the younger members of the group, they surrender to the police and the Children's Society.

To their amazement, they are not jailed but are fed and given a warm bed to sleep in.

Eventually they are sent to the Midwest where loving families are waiting to adopt them.

As the story of Willie unfolds, Courtney comes to realize that a home is not just material things but spiritual as well. People who love you and care for you, people you can count on and roots everyone needs to survive.

Courtney decides to give it another try with her parents and knows she must give something to get something and how hard it would be on her own.
