The U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service is working to establish new procedures for the care and operation of Kwajalein's Turtle Pond.

"We are working with USAKA on trying to take better care of those turtles — basically, develop some protocols that would address their needs," said Michael Molina, environmental review coordinator for the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service, in Honolulu. "We want to put together a more formal description that people can look at."

Needs include feeding and cleaning the pond, to name a few, Molina said.

Currently, volunteers gather scrap produce at Surfway that can't be sold, and bring it to the turtles

Officials from the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service, along with other federal agencies, will work with USAKA to establish new protocols for the care of turtles at Kwajalein's Turtle Pond.

CMI looks at pearl production

By KW Hillis

MAJURO, RMI — Researchers at the College of the Marshall Islands Arrak campus hope to find a way to raise more pearl-producing oyster young in one of many projects currently underway.

In the oyster study, elongated salad-plate sized oysters, reminiscent of the movie "Cocoon," rest at the bottom of each of six 7,000-liter circular, concrete tanks. Strung across the top are small, blue buoys holding a floating net full of tiny, black-lipped pearl oyster spat, or young. Some tanks contain foot-long sea cucumbers oozing imperceptibility around the stationary oysters.

In a small, white sterile-looking room next door to the tanks, Aquaculture Research scientist Dr. Manoj Nair explains how

USAKA SARS policy becomes regulation

By KW Hillis

Associate Editor

Kwajalein and Roi-Namur contractor employees now have specific restriction guidelines for traveling to certain Asian countries as a result of SARS, or severe acute respiratory syndrome.

As of May 1, USAKA Commander Col. Jerry Brown made official travel to China, Hong Kong, Singapore and Vietnam off-limits and discouraged unofficial or leisure travel to the same countries for all contractor employees. Department of Defense personnel are already banned from traveling to those countries for either official or unofficial business.

"While there have been no cases (or even suspected cases) on Kwajalein, we must be vigilant in protecting our community," Brown wrote in his memo to all residents of USAKA/RTS.

In addition to discouraging personal travel to those regions, Brown discouraged sponsoring any visitors from those locations.

If a resident does decide to travel to the list of restricted areas, then, according to Brown, they must follow three procedures and pay for any costs.

Dispatches from the front tell Iraqi people's stories

By Jim Garamone

American Forces Press Service

BASRA, Iraq, April 30, 2003 – A British medic from Yorkshire is proud of the work his ambulance crew has done in this southern Iraqi city, but wishes his “lads” would drive more carefully.

The medic, who didn't want his name used, said that most of the work he's been getting from coalition forces has been as a result of traffic accidents. “We guarantee getting you to hospital in less than an hour,” he said. “We haven't lost anyone yet.”

He said that under Saddam, health care was used as a weapon. “If you were the favored, you got world-class health care and the best drugs. If you weren't, you got next to nothing.”

He said he tried to save the life of an Iraqi boy who had a brain cyst. It had gone untreated because “he came from the wrong side of town” and the boy died.

He said his unit treats and transports all people – coalition and Iraqi. “You can learn more here in a month than you would in a year at home – burns, amputations, gunshot wounds – you just don't see that in Yorkshire.”

BAGHDAD, Iraq May 2, 2003 – Seeing television, newspaper and magazine images of Saddam's palaces is one thing.

Seeing them in real life is something else. You can't get a feel for the scale of these edifices any other way.

The Abu Gharib palace, where the Coalition Land Forces Command is located, is called the Water Palace in some circles. Saddam built this massive pleasure dome in the midst of a lake. Just the foyer of the building would easily “house” my house, with room to spare. Whole mountains somewhere are probably at sea level because of the amount of marble in this one structure.

Another palace near the airport is built on its own man-made mountain. The surrounding area has a man-made lake, surrounded by huge bathouses and houses. These pleasure palaces are surrounded by towers where machine-gun wielding guards perched during Saddam's regime.

Other people have told me about palaces in Basra and Tikrit.

Every country needs a showplace. But how many showcases does Iraq need? The palaces are the most visible example of Saddam's disregard for the Iraqi people.

BAGHDAD, Iraq, May 3, 2003 – One observation soldiers make continually around here is, “I've got kids that age.”

Kids line the streets as soldiers drive past and wave and call to them. U.S. civil affairs personnel meet these kids every day, and they are trying to make their lives a little bit easier.

“Some of these kids are so young, they have no idea why this is happening,” said Army Capt. Richard Cote, who commands Direct Support Team 2 with the 422nd Civil Affairs Battalion out of Fort Bragg, N.C. “They have no responsibility for this mess, and you really want to help them.”

Spc. Raymond Weldon, another member of the team, described a father bringing forth a young girl. She had been playing in a mound of garbage. “She had a huge gash in her foot,” Weldon said. “We cleaned her up and got her to a clinic. But she needed shoes. We've noticed many children in the same situation.”

The people the civil affairs team deals with are not the fortunate members of Saddam Hussein's Baath Party. “These people are poor and they need a hand up,” Cote said.

Letters to the Editor

War with Iraq creates new enemies

This headline, from the New York Times, says it all:

BUSH SAYS IT WILL TAKE TIME TO FIND IRAQ'S BANNED ARMS

You bet it will take some time — like, never. It's now clear that Bush and his aides — with the help of the Pentagon, Fox News, CNN and other conservative media outlets — misled the country into supporting his war against Iraq. No “mushroom clouds” (from an earlier Bush speech), no WMD, an ‘Elite Republican Guard’ that turned out to be a joke.

Well, Bush isn't the first politician to lie to the people, and he certainly won't be the last. What we should have learned is that Congress should not betray the Constitution by ill-advised, ultra-patriotic resolutions that allow a President to risk American lives in a war that isn't really a war.

Even now, those conservatives are starting to chant the party line that says, “Well, we DID rid Iraq of a brutal dictator.” And we did. But if Iraq goes the way of Afghanistan (remember that bombed-out country?), then we've created another American-hating colony ripe for takeover by Islamic extremists.

This much is clear: if you're watching Rupert Murdoch's Fox Network you're being fed the Republican party line, and while we've been watching the rocket's red glare, Bush has been turning our government over to wealthy CEOs and right-wing extremists.

— Scott Mock

Elementary students experience local culture

By Jim Bennett
Editor

Teachers at George Seitz Elementary School listened to their students from the host nation during recent lessons about Marshallese culture.

"It was the kids who were really the teachers, and I'm so glad they were willing to share," said fourth-grade teacher Janice Riordan.

As a result of the lessons, the students performed and displayed work in the second annual Marshallese Cultural Experience, Saturday at the Dayve Davis Multi-Purpose Room.

The event opened with the Republic of the Marshall Islands national anthem "Forever Marshall Islands," followed by a song about colors red and green, performed by the kindergarten class.

Next, the first-graders took the stage to recite a poem of "Thanks" in English and Marshallese, using cue cards to translate for the standing-room-only crowd.

After a PowerPoint presentation, based on research by sixth-graders, the fourth-graders portrayed the Marshallese legend of Jabro and "How the sail came to the outrigger canoe."

A lively dance, with students from various grades, capped the stage event.

Afterwards, those attending could visit the display of art by second-graders; stories transcribed by English as a second language students; weaving by fifth-graders; and demonstrations by third-graders on the use of native plants, along with readings of Marshallese legends.

USAKA sets required SARS procedures ...

First, before leaving Kwajalein, the "traveler must discuss travel plans with the chief medical officer at the hospital."

Secondly, the traveler cannot "enter or reenter USAKA until 10 days after they leave the restricted areas," and third, before entering USAKA, the traveler must get "a clean bill of health, with no evidence of SARS documented by a physician," Brown wrote.

Restricting travelers' return or entry into USAKA follows the Republic of the Marshall Islands restriction on direct entry into the RMI from those locations.

SARS is affecting people world-wide in how they live and where they go, according to cover stories in TIME, Newsweek and U.S. News & World Report magazines now on Ten-Ten's shelf.

Campus tackles aqua- and agriculture ...

chlorophyll-green algae in the large glass beakers are used to feed the growing oysters.

Finding a way to increase the number of pearl-producing oyster young is just one of many aquaculture and agriculture projects in progress at the CMI Cooperative Research and Extension Program. The program's mission, funded by U.S. Department of Agriculture, is to research and develop the Marshall Islands resources, provide outreach programs targeting nutrition and reduction of family violence and education of Marshallese farmers, according to CMI officials in May 2003 Pacific Magazine.

Research has been going on at the campus, known as the CMI Arrak campus, for the last four to five years, said CMI President Dr. Wayne Schmidt in an e-mail.

On one side of the leafy campus, Dr. Dilip Nandwani leads an agricultural experiment under a huge net tent in an effort to modify breadfruit to produce fruit all year, rather than just once a year.

In addition to his focus on breadfruit, Nandwani's projects since 2000 include hydroponic and soil vegetable cultivation and teaching local Laura farmers eco-friendly farming practices and how to grow disease-free bananas, Nair said.

Producing a disease-resistant taro plant is one of Dr. Virendra Mohan Verma's three projects, Nair said. Verma hopes to grow and popularize sweet potatoes, enriched with vitamin A, and mushrooms, too.

Besides introducing new foods like protein-rich, high fiber mushrooms, the extension service works to expand the use of indigenous plants such as making coconut jam.

On the other side of the campus, past the administrative buildings, classrooms and cafeteria, the large aquaculture tanks contain the growing oysters.

Nair said he started in April a demonstration farm, focused on black pearl oysters, in the lagoon opposite the campus.

"This farm will be used for demonstration training on pearl farming and pearl production techniques for the people here," Nair said.

Development of more spat, or oyster young, is one focus of the research, Nair said. Another is teaching how to insert the pearl seed in each oyster so that the oyster produces a black pearl. Some people are just better at it than others, he said. If it is done according to protocol and the person is good at seeding the oysters, however, the return of pearls can be up to 70 percent.

Another, related project, concentrates on discovering the spawning cycle of the oysters in the lagoon, Nair said.

Previous research projects focused on using sea cucumbers as a food source and fertilizer and on bolstering the number of cowries, since the shells are highly coveted by collectors in the Marshalls.

New at Grace Sherwood Library

The Grace Sherwood Library is experiencing delays getting best-sellers through the McNaughton Book Service.

"But the good news is that we have had a huge number of donations, and we have been processing and getting those on the shelves for you at a record rate," said Librarian Pat Wanslow.

The following are a portion of the "new to us" selections:

Beach Blanket Bigej

By Jon Cassel

Contributing Writer

The coolers were packed and the sunscreen was rubbed in Saturday as students from Kwajalein Jr./Sr. High School took the day off for their annual trip to Bigej.

Seventh- and eighth-graders must complete five service hours, and freshmen through seniors must work 10 service hours, which can be earned through a number of projects such as the Christmas on Carlos and student dances, to name a few.

Early that morning, kids from grades 7-12 boarded the Great Bridge for the hour-long trip. Once on the island, everyone was free to do as they wished. Several people set up beach towels, stereos, barbecues and umbrellas to relax for the day.

Most students agreed that the day's getaway provided a nice break.

"It was certainly better than sitting in the classroom all day," said senior Mabelle Warga.

After several hours of fun and many sunburns, students packed up their things and headed home.

Catch of the week

Mark Bailey and Jim Friday stand with a 9-foot-long, 281.4-pound marlin they caught near Roi-Namur Sunday. Friday hooked the fish around 1 p.m. in a bird pile about 1 mile west of North Pass. After an hour-long fight, and with help from his crewmates Bailey, Julie Heater and Valin Anuntak, he brought the fish into the boat.

weekly, said Ray Denham, Surfway manager.

"We weighed it once and it was 35 pounds," said Jim Schilling, who works near the pond in Communications and has helped care for the turtles since 1988. "Tomatoes are their favorite."

The turtles have been the source of debate in recent Hourglass letters to the editor, with two letters calling for the release of the hawksbill and green sea turtles, both endangered species, and two pieces, including a guest commentary by long-time resident Bobby Koa, detailing the history of the pond and its residents, and essentially describing it as a local landmark.

The pond grew out of a fish pond in the 1960s before the turtles were listed as endangered, according to Koa. He and Schilling, who first encountered the turtles there during his first tour in 1971, believe the current resident turtles, some of them now more than 32 years old, were originally pets in Kwajalein homes.

But the government effort predates the letters debate.

Molina said a Fish and Wildlife biologist has worked with USAKA, the U.S. Fisheries Service, National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration, Environmental Protection Agency and RMI EPA to draft the new procedures since a recent environmental meeting on Kwajalein, last month.

Procedures would be based on local needs, as well as data from zoos and the organizations.

"We still want to be protective, but not lose sight of the community value [of the Turtle Pond]," Molina said. "We see the value of having it. It's a good educational tool. It allows children and adults to get up close to an endangered species in a manner you probably wouldn't see in the states."

Molina added that does not mean all the turtles will remain in the pond.

"Right now, everything is on the table. We just started," Molina said. "We might look at releasing some if it seemed like the turtle could survive. Some are very old and probably wouldn't fare well."

Other considerations revolve around procedures for taking in new, perhaps injured turtles.

"If they have an infection, we wouldn't want to introduce that to the others," Molina said. "A lot has to be considered."

Mary Lou Batlok, left, and Kila William count brown-bag lunches ready for Kwajalein school children from Ebeye who may not otherwise have regularly supplied lunches. The program of delivering lunches began Tuesday after private donations from KRS managers and departments funded the effort.

Food service delivers school lunch

By Jim Bennett
Editor

Forty-three students at Kwajalein schools started receiving school lunches Tuesday, thanks to a new program.

Funded by donations from KRS managers and departments, workers at Cafe Pacific now pack sack lunches with a sandwich, fruit, chips and cookies. The lunches are then delivered to the schools by 11 a.m., to meet the school schedule.

"Kids who are hungry don't learn well," said Karen Ammann, school superintendent.

Ammann added that previously, parents, teachers or friends of a student would chip in to make a meal available if he or she were going without.

Now more than 33 people and organizations have signed up to sponsor a student at $20 a month.

"This makes it so much easier, and it's very much appreciated," Ammann said. "And they loved it."

To sponsor a child, call Jo Knapp, 50533.
