DOD directed CAC protects DoD network

One by one, everyone in USAKA using a government computer or having access to a government network is going through the effort of filling out paperwork and providing information so a Common Access Card can be issued, according to Tom Russell, Kwajalein Police Department CAC administrator. The program is not unique to USAKA, but is Department of Defense-directed so this is being done world-wide.

"I call [the CAC] the key to the computer," he said. "You will put the card in the reader. Enter your pin number and it will unlock your computer. This card will actually take the place of military and DoD civilian IDs."

Since the end of May, he has issued over 200 cards, each during an individually scheduled half-hour appointment.

SARS USAKA travel policy modified

On July 5, the World Health Organization removed Taiwan from its list of areas where SARS, or severe acute respiratory syndrome, was transmitted person-to-person. WHO also dropped the SARS-related travel restriction recommendation for Beijing, China on June 24. Taiwan was the last known place SARS was transmitted person-to-person and Beijing was the last area in the world WHO had issued SARS-related restricted travel recommendations.

"Effective immediately, USAKA travel restrictions have been reduced to coincide with worldwide decreased SARS risks,"

Fuel pier under construction Marine operations continue on

By April Brown

About four years ago, it came to the attention of the Navy that Kwajalein's fuel pier was in need of some renovations. The last time the concrete and wooden plank fuel pier was renovated was in 1995 and the wear and tear was becoming apparent.

"The pier was long overdue for renovations from regular use," said Bob Babcock, Marine Operations manager. "It forced the Navy to fix and strengthen the pier."

The pier was built by the Navy and still falls under their jurisdiction. During an inspection four years ago, it came to their attention that the pier was in need of an upgrade, Babcock said.

Kwajalein-born ponders patriotism

Have you ever thought what your life would be like if it had a soundtrack? Because right now, mine would be playing a song that goes a little something like this, "Cause I'm leaving on a jet plane, don't know why I'm going to Spain. Oh, babe, I hate to swim."

You see, Kwajalein, I have a shocking confession to make. Well, actually, it's not really a confession and it's not really shocking. (If it was, I wouldn't tell everyone—duh!) But, what I intend to confess in a shocking manner is something you probably know about me, and that is — I am, lo and behold, not an athlete.

But, why would it matter to you, the average Kwajaleinian, if I'm not an athlete? Well, if I'm not an athlete, then why would a person like me be leaving to compete in one of the world's biggest swim competitions in Barcelona, Spain? (See article page 8.)

That's right, me, the non-athlete, the ultimate slacker, the lazy tall guy who would rather sit in front of the tube than in a tube playing water polo, is competing not for the first time, but for the second, in one of the world's biggest swim competitions. It's an irony that such an opportunity would be blessed upon a person like me who dreads to go so much. In fact, I'd "actually" rather stay here and work long hours at the Hourglass, than go swim in a practice lane with some Italian girls with calves of cold steel kicking my butt in the water and on land.

However, we still haven't gotten to the answer why I'm going. Is it because my Mom, I mean my coach, is making me? Is it because I have the talent? Is it because of the experience?

No, no, and no. It's because of the fact that while I may be as white as plaster, I am going for one sole reason and that is because I am going to swim under the banner of the Marshallese flag. In fact, I remember when they played the Marshallese national anthem at swim meets; I sometimes accidentally put my hand over my heart during that anthem rather than the American anthem.

And while I didn't intend to do it that way, it for some reason just felt right. And now that I look back, it seems to me that maybe I was doing it for a reason and that's because that there might just be a little bit of Marshallese in me. Maybe because I was born on Kwajalein. So, does that mean I'll go faster? Or does it even mean anything at all? I don't know.

Therefore I pose the question to you now, Kwajalein, the question that could determine my identity and possibly yours too. What does it mean to be a Marshallese patriot? And I don't mean to cause chaos in the structure of your "perfect little universe," I want you to think about this question for a moment because in that moment, or by the time you read this editorial, I could be standing on the starter's blocks having my name called out in front of a million people. And while I really will probably be petrified, all that really matters is the two words that come after my name, Marshall and then Islands, because in my dream-world, my soundtrack will be playing, "I'm Proud to be Marshallese" with cheesy synthesizers and Marshallese women in mumus singing in the background. As that song is playing in my mind, I see myself standing with my Marshallese team-mates, Jared and Carlos, singing along as loud as can be. The only difference though is since it's my soundtrack, they would be off-key and I would be perfectly in-tune, like Pavarotti.

However me being akin to Pavarotti aside, I still want you to consider the question, Kwajalein, and get back to me when I'm back on-island, a year from now. I'm sure by then you will have come up with an answer. Until then T.T.F.N. (or ta ta for now) to all my friends at the Hourglass and on-island, because by the time I return, I might have already learned the true meaning of being an RMI patriot.

CAC issued to all with IT network access...

Issuing the cards, each with a chip encoded with an individual's identifying information, to almost 2,300 people in USAKA is only one part of the process, said Ronal Cook, KRS Operations manager. The IT department will soon start installing card readers on each work computer and card holders will be instructed on how to use the card.

"You will have to swipe our reader with the Common Access Card in order to use your computer," Cook said. "Its part of the network security upgrade system."

The entire program is scheduled to be in place by Oct. 1, 2003.

Each person, with a logon to a computer serviced by the IT department, has to complete a three-step process to get the CAC, said Penny Russell, USAKA Contracting officer.

Step one is filling out the government form, either available from a supervisor or by e-mail along with directions on how to fill the form out, she said.

The second step is verification that the individual is authorized to receive a CAC.

Penny Russell and a representative from IT see each person at a conference room central to the department or organization currently getting the cards.

On Thursday, outside building 735's conference room, a long line of Community Services employees stood, each with a filled-out CAC application in hand. As each person entered the conference room, IT Network administrator Angel Garcia checked a list of personnel with authorized logons before signing the CAC application. Russell then checked the form and two photo identification cards to verify the person is who they say they are and that they are under contract here.

Passports, drivers' licenses, K-badges, security badges, almost anything with a picture on it, she said. Once verified, the person is given an appointment to see Tom Russell.

Step two takes just a few minutes, the time depending on the number of people waiting for verification.

"People come in and get an appointment and get upset," Penny Russell said. "They think that they will get their card here. This is just step two of the process."

Step three occurs at Tom Russell's office located on the first floor of building to produce a CAC, he explained how the card is used, what the information on the card means and some safeguards to keep in mind.

Russell's workstation is complete with two card readers, a camera connected directly to the computer, a device to electronically record a fingerprint and a keypad to enter personal identification numbers or a PIN.

He put his card in the card reader on the right side of his computer and a screen popped up on his terminal asking for a PIN. Once entered, the computer screen showed the DEERS or defense eligibility enrollment system program.

"I took a break, I took my card out of the reader and took it with me," he said. When he left his computer, he did not have to log off or shut down what he was working on.

"All this does is lock the terminal. It doesn't affect any work you are working on," he said. "It locks it from someone coming along and doing something in your name."

For some departments with terminals used by more than one person, each person should sign off before they leave the terminal so another user can logon, otherwise that terminal is locked to everyone but the last user, he said.

"Guard and remember are key words," he said.

Guard the card, since it belongs to DoD and must be reported to this office if lost, and remember the PIN, he said.

"Under the current setup, if you key your PIN in wrong three times in a row or if you just totally forget it, in order to reset that PIN, you have to physically bring your card to this office," he said. "I have to put it into this reader and you have to put your finger on the finger print machine in order to reset your PIN."

Although a program to handle resetting a PIN remotely is in the works, but that is still down the road, he said.

There are three types of color-coded badges. Green-striped cards are for U.S. employees, red-striped are for foreign nationals or any non-U.S. citizen and a no-color card is for military or DoD civilians, he said.

The badges and the CAC program is a DoD-wide program, Russell said. The information on the badges is designed for all of DoD and not tailored to Kwajalein such as the shopping privileges listed on the green badges. These cards are issued to people who are on island on a transportation agreement or a contract which pays for the person PCSing in and out of Kwajalein.

"Badges are set up according to DoD rules and it doesn't affect shopping on Kwajalein, it just affects shopping overseas," he said. He added that Hawaii is not considered overseas so individuals carrying badges with shopping privileges cannot use them in Hawaii.

If a U.S. employee is an on-island, local hire, then the green-striped card does not have privileges listed on the front since the person is either a dependent or is supposed to live off the local economy if at another overseas base, Russell said.

Preparing to process a CAC application, Russell entered the information in his computer from the form. Once Prior planning provides fueling capability...

When the tanker arrives it is lined up next to the pier and anchored in place while the fuel is unloaded.

The boat, which is secured to the pier by two buoys attached to anchors lying on the ocean floor and strong enough to hold a full tanker in place during 40-knot winds, has caused a lot of wear to the pier structure.

Construction by San Juan Construction contracted under Oceaneering International Incorporated started in early June to upgrade the pier, Babcock said. In addition to that refurbishing, the Navy is also providing a new anchoring system which involves anchor plates connected to buoys that are placed into the seabed instead of just laying on the ground. The pier's wooden planks have been replaced by 800 feet of stainless steel that serves as a sturdy walkway.

Part of Oceaneering's contract requires that regular Marine operations cannot be disturbed.

All construction work has to be scheduled around the arrival of ships and other operations, Babcock said.

Without the contract agreement, Kwajalein's fuel farm would be feeling the major effects of the construction and Oceaneering is making every effort to prevent any interruptions, he said.

"The impact is minimal. We're scheduling our work around their needs," said Darrell Haugh, Oceaneering International Incorporated's project manager.

Except for a one week shutdown in early July, the fuel farm's operations have been uninterrupted during the reconstruction, Haugh said. In preparation for the shutdown, the fuel farm placed enough fuel on barges to satisfy any anticipated needs.

San Juan construction workers remove valves from the end of the fuel pier. The valves are used to connect different size hoses used by ships for refueling. The construction team has already replaced 800 feet of wooden plank with stainless steel for the walkway to shore.

"Efforts are being made so that no one runs out of fuel," Babcock said.

The project requires a great deal of compromise from several departments on island and the Marine Department is working to make the transitions as smooth as possible.

"We [are] providing them a barge to work from and ongoing support throughout their construction period," said Tom Dillon, Marine Department port captain.

This construction did require a little help from Kwajalein's sailing community, said Simone Smead, Community Activities manager.

"No Small Boat Marina boats had to be relocated but several private sailboats did," Smead said.

To date only three boats have had to move, said Byron Brown, a private boat owner. Luckily for Brown, he was borrowing mooring space from a friend and had to move anyway.

The first move only applied to boat owners on the south side of the pier.

"When they move to the north side [to continue construction], more boat owners will be affected," he said.

The projected completion date of the renovation is April 1, 2004 and there are no other expected interruptions to their operation, Haugh said.

Card reader installations are next on the list...

entered, the DEERS program checked if the person was already in the system.

If in the system because of previous military service, Russell updates the information; if not, the person is added to the system.

He entered the person's current phone numbers, eye and hair colors, height and weight, if he or she is an organ donor, marital status and blood type, if known. Once all the information is entered, the applicant is given a printout of the information to verify that everything is correct.

A fingerprint of the right index finger is then taken and fed directly into the computer, as is the photo he takes of the person requesting a CAC.

Finally, the person enters a private six to eight digit PIN on the keypad twice. The second time "enter" is pushed, the actual badge is printed. Using the second reader to the right of his terminal, the new card's chip is encoded with the applicant's information.

"This on the average takes about seven minutes if everything is working as it should," he said, explaining that the encoding involves accessing the mainland to retrieve information. "It has taken as long as 45 minutes."

The next part of the process will be to learn how to use the badge once the card reader is installed.

Aeromet update

June's rain bolstered by one dousing

By Kris White

Aeromet Meteorologist

At the close of another weather business day on June 27, the precipitation total for the month stood at 3.59", which was about 41 percent of normal.

Nearing the end of June, it began to look as though we were going to finish out the month on a very dry note. If it hadn't been for the development of a strong convective complex across the atoll, and a subsequent 2.64" dousing received on June 28, June would have passed by as dry as a hot prairie wind.

On pace to set a record for the fourth driest June in 59 years of record keeping, the heavy rainfall instead bolstered the end of month total, and June 2003 will now go down as only the 12th driest June on record.

We still closed out the first half of the year at 93 percent of normal with 36.49" of rain, thanks mostly to the wet months of April and May. As for the month of July, the normal precipitation for the month is 10.24", so if climatology is any guide, expect July to be wetter.

Temperatures were slightly above normal again for the month of June. The average temperature for the month was 83.1°F, which was 1.1°F above normal. This makes the fifth month this year in which temperatures have averaged above normal, with the lone exception of the month of April. Above average sea-surface temperatures in association with a waning El Niño are the likely culprit for the excessive air temperatures experienced. Data generated by nearby buoys in the Pacific indicate that sea-surface temperatures have indeed been above normal for most of this year.

For the long term, the Climate Diagnostics Center operated by National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration has officially declared an end to the El Niño of 2002-2003.

So, what does this mean for Kwajalein?

According to the Pacific El Niño Southern Oscillation or ENSO Applications Center, slightly drier conditions normally follow the end of an El Niño event in the Marshall Islands. North of 8°N latitude, precipitation values are forecast to be 90 percent of normal for the months of July through September. That, of course, puts us in a slightly drier zone. However, a return to more normal conditions is expected during the autumn months.

Leisure travel allowed, but discouraged...

wrote USAKA commander Col. Jerry Brown, in his July 8, 2003 memorandum.

At least 8,400 people worldwide had contracted SARS since the end of 2002 which resulted in 812 deaths as of July 5, according to WHO's Web site: www.who.int. Most of the transmissions of the virus were traced to China, Hong Kong, Singapore and Vietnam resulting in WHO travel restriction recommendations. In April, the Republic of the Marshall Islands denied entry to visitors or returning travelers who had visited the affected countries within a two week time period and required a 10 day quarantine period.

On May 1, 2003, Brown declared the countries and cities listed above as off-limits to contractor employees official travel and discouraged unofficial or leisure travel to the same locations, as reported in the May 8, 2003 Hourglass. Department of Defense personnel are still banned from both official and unofficial travel to those countries.

Based on recommendations from Kwajalein Hospital chief medical officer Dr. Eric Lindborg and staff physician Dr. John Janikowski, the commander set the following travel restrictions in his memo.

While leisure travel for Kwajalein contractor employees to the previously SARS-affected areas is now

— Col. Jerry Brown,
USAKA commander,
July 8, 2003 memo

lifted, any government-funded travel to those areas is still restricted, Brown wrote. Both official and unofficial travel to the SARS areas is still off-limits to DoD personnel.

"While there have been no cases, or even suspected cases, on Kwajalein, we must be vigilant in protecting our community," he wrote.

The RMI has also lifted the ban on direct entry into the Marshalls, including Kwajalein, but USAKA still discourages unofficial and leisure travel by contractor personnel and any visitors from those areas.

"If contractor personnel should choose to travel to the restricted locations or sponsor a visitor from these locations, traveler or sponsor must discuss travel plans with the Chief Medical Officer at the hospital prior to travel," he wrote. "The hospital will provide information to the traveler that is aimed at safeguarding their health while traveling in these countries."

Lindborg and Janikowski recommend if a fever greater than 100.4 degrees Fahrenheit is measured and is accompanied by a dry cough, shortness of breath or breathing difficulties within "10 days of travel to the area of concern," the sufferer should get "early diagnosis and treatment of suspected illnesses."

No matter where a person travels, they should frequently wash their hands, avoid exposure to individuals who have the previously listed symptoms, seek medical help if needed and stay up to date on the latest SARS information, they said. Updated information on SARS can be found at the WHO Web site and the Centers for Disease Control Web site: www.cdc.gov/ncidod/sars/.

Swimming hopefuls to compete in Spain

By April Brown
Reporter

The World Championships in Barcelona, Spain will begin July 12, with the Marshall Islands well represented in the swimming competitions.

Swimmers Carlos Notarianni, Jared Heine, and Loren Lindborg, along with their coach Cris Lindborg, left early this week to compete in the swimming portion of the championship games. All the competitions are water-related.

The participants in the Barcelona Championships are Olympian level, some of the fastest swimmers in the world. There are usually about 200 competitors in each race, but only the eight fastest swimmers will make it to the final competition, Cris Lindborg said. Her goal for these three is to improve their competition times.

"Improving my personal times is what makes me swim faster," Notarianni said.

Although improving their times is a top priority, their personal goals keep them motivated, Loren Lindborg said.

Notarianni is preparing for a chance to beat Eric Moussambani from Equatorial Guinea, who he almost beat during the games in Japan. Lindborg is looking forward to the opportunity to beat the top swimmers from the big name countries.

Although the three-member Marshall Islands team are nervous at competing against Olympic-level swimmers, this is not their first major competition. All three participated in the Micronesian Games last summer bringing home a total of 18 metals.

The youngest member of the team, 15-year-old Notarianni, has been a Kwajalein swim team member for eight years and is an eighth grade student at Kwajalein Junior/Senior High

"My parents signed me up and I just started swimming, and now I can't stop," he said.

The two hours of practice, six days a week, are worth an opportunity to represent his country, Notarianni said.

"I want to represent my country. Because [the Marshall Islands] are smaller, it'll make more people aware that we're out here," he said.

Although he is nervous about the competition he is going to face, he feels that this experience will help him in the future, specifically when he heads off to college where he plans on pursuing an engineering degree.

In addition to swimming for the Marshall Islands, Heine will be the official RMI flag bearer at Barcelona's opening ceremonies.

Heine, 19, attends Florida State University in the pursuit of a business degree. He lives in Honolulu when not at school and has trained with his coaches there from the Kamehameha Swim Club for the past month and a half.

"It doesn't get much more competitive than this. I am really, really nervous and I hope I am able to swim at the level I think I am capable of," Heine said.

Heine first started swimming in Guam with the Manhoben Swim Club, and he trained with them for eight years before moving to Hawaii and joining the Kamehameha Swim Club.

The oldest of the three at 21, Lindborg is a junior at Linfield College in Oregon. He swims competitively at college and is both excited and nervous about the upcoming experience.

"If I didn't say I was nervous, I'd be lying," he said.

Born and raised on Kwajalein, Lindborg said he feels a certain connection to the Marshall Islands and is ready to represent them in this competition.

Cris Lindborg considers this an excellent opportunity for not just the swimmers but all future competitors from the Marshall Islands.

"This level of competition raises our standards and hopefully it will inspire our kids to take part in this sport. Marshallese should have some of the top swimmers in the world since they are surrounded by the best training venue in the world," she said.

The coach of the Kwajalein swim team off and on since 1984, Lindborg also helps the competitors prepare for the international competitions each year.

The swimming program on Kwajalein is one of the biggest swim teams in the Pacific and hopefully this will inspire other teams to get more organized, she said.

"My hope is to encourage a similar program on Majuro and encourage them to build a pool so that they continue to compete on this level," Lindborg said.

The Marshall Islands three-person team is sponsored by the Federation Internationale de Natation [FINA] and the Barcelona Swim Club is providing room and board, Lindborg said.

Denial, a rock band formed in the '90s, is coming to Emon Beach, the Gilligan's Bar and the Outrigger on Roi-Namur early next week. The four member band, with Kevin Finkelmeier on drums, his brother Brian on guitar, Tony Buschle on bass and lead singer Dan Mecher, is originally from Cincinnati, Ohio.

Denial tour to rock islands

By April Brown
Reporter

Listening to music is always a great way to relax at the end of the workday. Next week both Kwaj and Roi residents will have the chance to unwind to live rock music thanks to Community Activities and Armed Forces Entertainment.

Denial, a rock band from Cincinnati, Ohio, will play on both islands next week starting at Emon Beach on Tuesday at 6:30 p.m.

Formed in the late nineties by brothers Kevin and Brian Finkelmeier, the four-man band developed a strong hometown following, according to Denial's Web site: www.denialmusic.com.

The group is on a 27-day AFE tour traveling throughout the Pacific, said Kathy Bates, Community Activities Entertainment and Facilities superintendent.

"The group will hit most of the bases in our circuit which is why they are scheduled for a mid-week concert instead of a weekend," she said.

In addition to the Emon Beach performance, the group will play at Gilligan's Bar, Wednesday at 8 p.m., before heading up to Roi-Namur's Outrigger on Thursday for a 7:30 p.m. show.
