Dive into 'Silent Wrecks,' goatees and eww

Some days, my job pays. Every other week, I get a little something signed by Ike Richardson that helps put food on the Bennett table, and this past week I got an advance copy of "The Silent Wrecks of Kwajalein Atoll," which gave me incentive to rejoin the scuba club.

The film, which aires at the Richardson Theater Sunday, follows a team of divers as they check out a number of wrecks here in the atoll. We have a story on the subject on page 16.

But what struck me most about the film is the way they captured my personal dive experiences and enhanced them.

In one instance, the film talks about the Fumi Maru and the lion fish present at the deep wreck. The film shows the black coral nearby, and my wife says, "Isn't that the Dyson Maru?"

Turns out, Dyson is the local name, as are K-5 Side, K-5 upright and P-Buoy for the other wrecks in the movie.

In addition to putting to film what I remember seeing on those dives, the crew adds historical perspective, tells where the ship originated and when and how it sank. I suppose I could have looked up the information in Mark

Miller's book, "In the Arms of the Sea: A Historical Guide to the Shipwrecks of Kwajalein Atoll," but seeing it on film, in live action, makes all the difference.

Now the movie includes some "drama" about a shark observing the divers, which for some fellow watching in Oklahoma might raise the tension level, and in one instance a shark actually postures. For divers out here, however, the response is simply, "I've seen a million of them."

But the film also includes incredible live film footage from Operation Flintlock. Local resident and co-producer Tom Krasuski said they obtained the film from the National Archives, and what a find it was. Many of the still photos we've run in The Hourglass were shot in precisely the same locations, during the same events. I saw several sequences that looked familiar, only they were in motion. And the gun camera footage from aircraft flying over Kwajalein, Roi-Namur and the ships in the lagoon really stands out.

The Oceanic Research Group brilliantly included on the DVD the source of the footage, an Army Pictorial Service film titled, "What Makes a Battle." This 20-minute 1944 documentary shows its age not only in the footage, but also in the voice-over. It's a great ride back in time. I particularly enjoyed the short talk at the end from Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower, his voice as clear as if he were alive today.

The movie starts at 7:30 p.m. Krasuski will introduce it and answer questions. Food Services will serve up dinner at 7 p.m. It has all the makings for a great evening. Don't miss it.

As I write this, I have to say good-bye to an old stand-by, my column head. Yep. Enough of you argued that I needed to change the five-year-old photo of me with my frazzled attempt at a goatee, that I finally broke down and had Jan shoot me again. She was happy to do so, until I handed her the camera. The new column head will appear on my next commentary.

A little history on the frazzled goatee, though. Five years ago, everyone was wearing them, and frankly, I thought it would be fun to grow it, go home on leave and shock my mother.

My grandfather simply said, "What. They don't have any razors on that !@# $%& island?"

I guess I could always grow it back.

This just in. I heard from former assistant editor Peter Rejcek who is freezing his caboose in Antarctica. They have descended into winter and 24/7 darkness and can not receive even mail, unless it's electronic. He said the stars are magnificent, but the wine supply is running low. They're taking bets on who pulls a Jack Nicholson from "The Shining." There's nothing like a healthy work environment.

For those of you who haven't caught the finale for "The Bachelor" and the final three on "American Idol," I won't spoil the endings, but one involves someone actually throwing up on television. Now there's a moment you hope the family is taping. Possibly your only appearance on national television and you spew. I wonder if the cameraman thought:

- A.) This is great, live stuff.
- B.) Wow, we've captured the intensity of the pressure here.
- C.) Ewwww. Do I get paid extra to-night?

Classic television that will some day rank up there with the scene when Lucy is stuffing her mouth with chocolates from the conveyor belt.

Check it out, but don't miss "Silent Wrecks." See you at the Rich.

Missile ranges team up for test support

By Jim Bennett
Editor

In an effort to streamline and maximize missile testing in the Pacific, the Missile Defense Agency supports the cliché that the whole is greater than the sum of its parts.

The MDA has brought together the Reagan Test Site with other missile test ranges to form the Pacific Range Support Team, which met on Kwajalein last week.

"This is a first for the DoD to achieve this level of cooperation -- to bring the instrumentation and working level people together is a first," said Steven Lopes, MDA deputy of Test Resources Directorate.

The PRST marked its second year now, having been born to support a planned target launch from the Kodiak Launch Complex in Kodiak, Alaska towards the Reagan Test Site. The mission has been delayed until later this summer, but has had positive results in that it led MDA officials to realize that one range couldn't support all the various requirements of some complicated missions and develop this teaming arrangement.

"It's been embraced and grown," said Neal Ortego, who chairs the group for MDA. "It's really ranged and advocated."

For years, each range has worked to its own particular niche generally within their traditional range boundaries. Kwajalein, for example, has, over the years, focused heavily on space operations using the Kiernan Re-entry Measurements Site sensor suite on Roi-Namur, ICBM testing with the Air Force and various missile defense programs that worked well with global, over-the-horizon missile shots.

On the other hand, White Sands Missile Range, given its geographic location, has focused on theater missile defense testing, among other things.

But development of the multi-layered, protective umbrella, proposed under the current administration, forced officials to look at different levels of testing. Each piece of the umbrella must work in concert, and testing went beyond the realm of one range.

"It gets out of traditional range boundaries. No one range can provide all the assets and resources to support the tests," Lopes said. "And there's not enough testing to support building up one range."

Since forming, the group has met quarterly, most often in Washington D.C., to tie in with other meetings. Now, however, the group plans to rotate and meet at different ranges, where officials can observe each other's capabilities, Ortego said.

As a group, they work to share problems and solutions. Where one range might have an issue, another range might already have encountered and fixed the problem, Ortego said.

In addition, the group can share expertise and mobile assets. As Kodiak prepares to launch a target as part of Integrated Flight Test - 13c, test experts from Point Mugu, White Sands and Vandenberg Air Force Base are campaigning to the Alaskan range to team with the Alaska Aerospace Development Corporation who run the KLC. When Pacific Missile Range Facility led the Long Range Air Launch Target test last month, RTS supported the mission and sent the KMRSS Worthy to assist with sea-based communications and telemetry work.

"Our vision is every range participates in every test in some way, either by contributing lessons learned, people or assets," Lopes said.

In fact, the Worthy will see more work and some upgrades in the coming year as part of the test bed development.

"It is a proven safety and telemetry gathering platform," said Terry Brown, RTS I&M program manager.

The upgrades on the Worthy serve as an example of how the PRST is supposed to work. Being mobile, the Worthy can travel to any number of destinations to support missions.

In the past, however, ranges had to certify each piece of equipment they might use, and since each range worked just a little differently, those certifications might take some time, pushing mission schedules back.

With the PRST, the upgrade work will include a committee made up of members from other ranges who will provide input on critical requirements, particularly range safety, communications, and data.

"We have to be able to talk to each other," Ortego said, adding the committee will give ideas for needed features.

"What do ranges need to make it useful?" Ortego said.

When the work is completed, the ranges will be able to certify the Worthy immediately, and, ideally, technicians from one range or another would be able to board the ship and work with the equipment.

And with the success of the LRALT test, Lopes and Ortego said MDA will look even more closely at air-launched targets, which especially feed into the Pacific test bed concept. With a limited number of land masses from which to launch targets, range testers can only utilize a certain number of trajectories for incoming target vehicles. But air-launched targets change that dynamic.

"We have to continue to develop air-launch targets," Lopes said. "They are key to the flexibility."

A short range air launch target test is set for later this year.

The group left island Saturday, to return to their home ranges, but with continually evolving test bed and test schedule, they'll undoubtedly be back.

Feeder lines ground out power Wednesday

By Jan Waddell
Reporter

A power outage impacted several critical areas on Kwajalein Wednesday.

Two feeder lines by Aviation "went to ground," at around 11:20 a.m., causing the outage, according to Ed Black, deputy manager of public works.

One of the feeder line's insulation split and the power damaged the second feeder's insulation. This took out two of the 12 feeder lines, numbers three and four, that supply power to Kwajalein.

Several buildings lost power, but crews diverted power from the damaged lines and brought most areas back up quickly.

The Fire Station, Building 901 and the Provost Marshal office were placed on generator, Black said. By Thursday, Everything was back on line except for the helicopter hangar, he added.

"My people did an outstanding job" switching over the power and repairing the damaged lines, said Fred McNickle, Public Works manager.

The outage impacted several offices and departments.

Information Technology notified all computer users, by e-mail, that a number of buildings, including the IT building, would lose power at 3 p.m. while crews worked on the problems. According to the e-mail, all network services on KLS, USAKA, KPD and the school system, along with public Internet and some MSN service, might be affected.

IT advised users to log off the network at 2:15 p.m. and shut the computers down by 3 p.m.

Meanwhile, Café Pacific crews did not have as big an impact as some other departments. They had already prepared for the lunch rush at 11:30 a.m.

"We had done everything ahead of time," said Billy Reynolds, Café Pacific shift supervisor.

The only two areas where the Café

Pacific crew had any difficulty were the grill and the dishwasher Reynolds said.

The grill had gone down, but the crew was still able to provide the lunch crowd with the scheduled French dip sandwiches.

The steam-line was dark, but Reynolds said, "We had to use flashlights to show people what they wanted."

Diners seemed to adjust to the lack of light, some commenting on the "romantic atmosphere."

For washing dishes, Reynolds said the staff soaked plates and silverware until the power came back on at about noon when they were able to finish washing the dishes.

Reynolds said they received a call around 12:30 p.m. and were told they might be without power again so the crew prepared for the evening dinner early, too.

Black said Thursday one of the feeder lines is almost repaired and the second will be repaired soon.

Fall softball out, new events in 2004-05 calendar

By Jim Bennett
Editor

The Community Activities calendar comes out next week listing all the events scheduled for June 2004-May 2005.

In the most notable of changes, fall softball has been cut, but other sports have expanded.

"This followed canvassing a lot of sports people on Kwaj on how sports seasons should run," said Torrey Landers, Recreation superintendent. "The majority of people we talked to were for this."

Essentially, Landers explained, interest in other sports grew and, with two softball seasons, sports seasons overlapped, taxing players and officials. Fall softball showed the greatest decline in participation, and games regularly rained out that time of year.

By eliminating fall softball, Community Activities was able to lengthen the soccer season, which as a sport continues to grow, he said. Last fall saw 24 teams participate.

Likewise, the indoor volleyball season, which jumped from 12 teams in 2003 to 19 teams in the last year, will begin before Christmas, take a short holiday hiatus and conclude a week before softball begins in February.

"Summer Fun" activities, however, kick off tomorrow with registration opening for indoor soccer. That league runs June 8-July 1, with Summer Fun volleyball and basketball and playing out later through the summer.

For the softball crowd, the annual co-ed softball "Sandbaggers" tournament will be held June 20-21.

Besides sports, the calendar features annual events along with some new activities.

The annual Fourth of July celebration will continue the tradition of an Emon Beach-based carnival with fireworks. In addition, the Armed Forces Entertainment-sponsored band, "Hometown News" will play at the venue.

Also new to the calendar are a number of Community Activities-sponsored golf events throughout the year, more special bowling sessions and a film festival for locally made movies to be held in September.

The holiday season will remain mostly traditional, with the addition of a New Years Eve carnival featuring a live band set for the Richardson Theater.

Next February, Community Activities will host a dating game at the Yuk Club on the 13th and bring back Moonlight Garden Romance at the public gardens for Valentine's Day.

March 13 will see the Reggae on the Rock festival at Coral Sands, with a live band, tie-dye stations and other activities.

Calendars will be available Friday in the grey boxes outside the post office.

Schools study superintendent, NCA issues

By Jan Waddell
Reporter

Kwajalein schools hope to hire the new superintendent by May 28.

The hiring process for the new Kwajalein school superintendent and the North Central Association for accreditation of the Kwajalein school system topped the agenda of the last School Advisory Council meeting for the 2003-04 school year, Wednesday.

Maj. Jud McCrary, SAC chairman, opened the meeting with an apology if his manner of moderating the SAC meetings was misinterpreted.

He said, "You have a right to have your voice heard."

He stressed that residents with concerns about the schools should contact their employer representative with their concerns and then the representatives can bring the concerns to the SAC board.

The meeting was then opened to items on the agenda.

Karen Ammann, Kwajalein school superintendent, addressed questions about her replacement as school superintendent, and said 16 applications were received for the position. Interviews were conducted, and the field has been narrowed to six candidates.

Ammann said some of the criteria the interview committee looked for in the new superintendent were length of time in a classroom and then administrative skills. She added they are looking for someone who has worked in a classroom for an extended period of time and has considerable classroom skills, not just administrative skills.

The position will probably encompass a combination of a superintendent and elementary school principal, but this could possibly change, according to Ammann.

Ammann stated she was no longer involved in the hiring process.

Meanwhile, the NCA report is now available and can be obtained through the school office or employee representatives.

"There are three sections to the NCA visitation report," Ammann said the report includes three sections — demographics with a description of the school and its programs; an outline of the path forward for the next cycle of student improvement; and a general appraisal of the school.

"It includes commendations as well as items that could be used for school improvement," Ammann said.

Barbara Bicanich, the NCA steering committee chair, said the report stated "more staff input more often" was needed.

Staff set goals for the next five years, making reading comprehension the goal for the elementary school level and printed reference material for the high school.

"The goals for the next cycle of student improvement were decided upon by the total faculty and parent representatives," Ammann said. "The exact wording for the goals is being worked on by committees at both levels."

Bicanich said she will meet with teaching staff and members of the committee to plan how to accomplish the new goals.

Bicanich said the NCA recommended using student testing to measure the progress of students. The last set of goals set forth by the NCA didn't have an absolute way of measuring student progression, she added.

Mary Beth Clark asked if there are funds to stock the school library with magazines and other printed material to help students improve their research skills. Clark also asked if the out-dated reference material would be brought up to date.

"We are looking at it," Bicanich said.

Ammann said the steering committee will meet in the fall to look at the general appraisal section of the report and develop a plan of action with time-lines.

"The plan should be presented to the SAC at its October meeting," she said.

In other business:

- Ammann reported teachers would be assigned to classes to meet the needs of the student population.

Teacher Cassandra Rubly asked if the teachers will be reassigned by seniority or teacher-request, and Jeffery Parker asked if Ammann or the incoming superintendent would do the reassignment.

Ammann said she would make the assignments based on class needs rather than seniority.

- Kindergarten registration was held last month and the projected number of kindergarteners for next year is 27.

Ed Hillman had a concern about the Ebeye kindergarteners who are invited to attend the Kwajalein school.

"The process is completed," Ammann said, adding five students from Ebeye were selected.

- Ammann awarded Bicanich and Lynn Beckler with appreciation certificates for their work with the North Central Association steering committee. She also awarded all the SAC board members certificates, stating they give up two nights a month to work through issues concerning the school system.

"They are very instrumental" Ammann said.

- McCrary said school yearbooks have arrived on island. They were flown in Wednesday and will be available for the yearbook signing party tomorrow.

- PTO Carnival for all grade levels is scheduled for Sunday, from 10 a.m. to 1 p.m., in the MP room and outside. It is for all grade levels.

- The Band and Choir concert will be held 7 p.m., May 27, in the MP room.

- Baccalaureate is set for May 30 at 6:30 p.m. at Island Memorial Chapel. KRS President Ike Richardson, Noda Lojkar and Protestant Chaplain Rick Funk all will speak. Students Camilla Morrison and Luke Riley will present musical selections.

June 2 the Senior Toast, for seniors only, will be held at Col. Jerry Brown's home.

Graduation will be held June 4 at 7 p.m. in the MP room. The doors will open at 6:30 p.m. and Steven Howell, Kwajalein Jr./Sr. High School principal, recommends arriving early to get a seat. Thirty seniors graduate this year.

- The last day of school for students is June 10. Elementary school report cards will be mailed home on June 15, and high school report cards will be mailed on June 18.

- The next SAC meeting will be held Sept. 15 at 7 p.m.

Visiting divers near fuel pier completion

By Jan Waddell
Reporter

Saturday night, sitting outside the Pacific Bachelors Quarters, the six-man crew from Oceaneering International Inc. took a break from the working on the Kwajalein fuel pier.

Dave Dewey, dive supervisor, and Ralph Dorval, field superintendent, along with divers Eldon Lair, Thad James, Mike Robinson and Jim Tonetti, relaxed, barbecued and shared stories of their diving experiences.

The fuel pier repairs are near completion and the dive crew has worked 12 to 14 hours, seven-days a week, for over a month.

Standing next to the grill, Dewey explained what the crew had been doing on the pier, as the crew slowly trickled down from their rooms to enjoy the evening with friends.

The fuel pier repairs follow a three-stage process, Dewey said. First, the 46 concrete and 42 steel pilings had to be prepped and ready for the fiberglass jackets. The second phase was to clean the steel piles, and in the third phase the concrete piles were blasted with water at 20,000psi, which eats away the old deteriorating concrete, before the fiberglass jackets are wrapped around the piles. The diver pumps epoxy into the jackets to strengthen the piles and seal them from further damage.

"[The epoxy] won't deteriorate like concrete, in water," Dewey said.

About two hours after the epoxy is pumped into the jacket, it begins to harden and will protect the piles for about 15 years.

When the dive crew is working at the shallower depths, near the shore, they stay down for up to five hours, but when they work at the end of the pier in deeper water, they only stay down for about three hours at a time.

And when the job is over, the work isn't.

"As soon as this job is up we all have other assignments," Dewey said.

Divers move from assignment to assignment, rarely taking time off for recreation, but when they do, they enjoy scuba diving, sailing or activities which have something to do with the water.

"We are still based on water-activity," Dewey said. "The water here, you can't pass it up."

Lair came down from his room, reclined in a chair, opened a beverage and began talking about why he became a diver.

He has been diving for about three years. He is from Minnesota, but admits he has been attracted to water all his life. He didn't want the same job as everyone else.

"I wanted to do something different," Lair said.

He has worked mainly in "black-water" cleaning barges and working on piers.

"Black-water" is dirty, cold water where divers are unable to see more than a few inches in front of them.

Lair said, on Kwaj, they see what they knew was in the water, but were never able to see before.

"This [water] is ideal," Lair said.

James was the next to join the group. He has also been diving for about three years, mainly in the Gulf of Mexico working on offshore oil rigs either welding or laying pipes.

He said he learned welding in high school, but what excited him the most was the aspect of "playing with electricity and welding under water."

The two aren't supposed to mix, but if done right, with the proper crew, then anything is possible, James said.

When asked if he had a dream dive in mind, he said he would be doing the deep-dive, over 1,275 feet.

He talked excitedly about what he had seen during his shift that day on the pier.

A lion fish had swum around his helmet and a spotted eagle ray gently glided by.

"We usually don't see more than six inches away," James said.

Robinson joined the group, pulled up a chair and added to James' story of lion fish and spotted eagle rays.

"Being out here is like diving in someone's aquarium," Robinson said.

Robinson has been diving for about four years. He is also an underwater welder and has worked in West Africa, on oil rig repairs and in Hawaii and San Diego on U.S. Navy submarine repairs.

Robinson said what he is doing isn't any different than any other job.

"You do the same things underwater you do topside," Robinson said.

Dorval, one of the more experienced divers, joined the group after his evening run.

One of the quieter members of the crew, Dorval was a U.S. Navy deep sea, mixed gas diver for over 20 years. He dove Iceland, Malaysia, Cuba and many places he didn't want to talk about.

"I have had a lot of good dives," Dorval said. "Diving is a younger man's game. Everything you do in the water is twice as hard."

Even though Dorval no longer dives, he said there has been a lot of good times and camaraderie throughout the years with different dives and divers.

Because commercial divers go from assignment to assignment, they rarely have days off and the hours spent on the job are long and hard.

Divers share tales of life on the job ...

"It is a lot of travel and a lot of time away from family," Dorval said.

He admitted he missed his family back in the states, but he has enjoyed the experiences on Kwajalein.

Tonetti, another former U.S. Navy diver, started out his diving career as a scuba diver on the submarine USS Tullibee.

He then became a diver second class and, in 1985, he attended the 1st Class Navy Dive School for mixed gas chamber dives, a diver's equivalent to the "Top Gun" school for naval aviators.

While recalling his experiences with the dive school, he and Dorval realized they both had attended the same naval dive school in 1985. Tonetti had attended in early '85 and Dorval in mid '85. Both men's names are on the diver's plaque that hangs at the school.

Tonetti stayed with submarines during his tour with the Navy stating, "I recovered airplanes and anything big."

During his career he dove off Haiti during their civil war, to salvage any ships which were sunk in the harbor by the Haitians, and to support the Army and Coast Guard during that operation.

Tonetti said the biggest dive he was on was TWA Flight 800 which exploded shortly after takeoff from Long Island in July 1996, bound for Paris. All 230 people on board died in the explosion.

Tonetti said he recovered bodies and parts of the plane. He added

Thad James takes his turn topside as the dive tender while the other divers work underwater on the fuel pier.

that over 90 percent of the plane was recovered and pieced back together.

"[Diving] is self rewarding," Tonetti said. "Everything is a challenge. I enjoyed the welding we did today. Places like this are fantastic. This is ideal."

He admitted they were seeing the dangers in the water on Kwajalein that all divers know are there, but rarely see due to water conditions.

"There is a lot of danger out there," Tonetti said.

Dorval said the divers working on the fuel pier are a hard-working group of divers.

"We have a good mix of ex-military and commercial divers," Dorval said.

Toonetti added, "We work hard. We have fun. We are proud of the result."

Roi police, EOD deal with shell

By Jim Bennett
Editor

An unexploded mortar shell found its way to the Roi Café Thursday, clearing the chow hall during the lunch hour.

No one was hurt, but three individuals have been charged with violating the USAKA regulation regarding removing unexploded ordnance, said Police Chief Dennis Johnson.

Roi-Namur police evacuated the area and cordoned it off, prior to the arrival of an Explosive Ordnance Disposal team, said Tom Eisele, EOD technician.

"We got really good support from KPD up there," Eisele added.

He described the mortar round as rusted and crusty, but still intact with propellant charges on the end.

Eisele said he and fellow EOD technician Liz Collier removed the World War II-era high explosive shell from near the building, took it to an emergency disposal area and destroyed it using explosives of their own.

Kimij kararik tok kom

Kimij kararik tok kom is the Marshallese way to say, "Welcome." Literally, it means, "We make you no longer strangers."

Corinne Brown, the new Army civilian information management officer, recently arrived from Stuttgart, Germany, where she worked with the U.S. European Command Headquarters.

She brings with her husband Gary Drost.

This is their first tour on Kwajalein.

"We are thrilled to be here! We are avid scuba divers and can't wait to get wet," Brown and Drost said.

Beware of strangers asking
