Safety at work, home is everyone's responsibility

I would like to take this opportunity to let the community know how important safety is to me. Although our mission is paramount and of vital importance to the protection of our country, there is no activity we perform on this base or within this command that is worth the impact of a serious injury or death. I have spoken with the various on-island company leaders, and especially with John Pickler, Kwajalein Range Services site manager. We stand united in our front to achieve a safe workplace with a goal for zero accidents. Fundamentally, our position is that all accidents are preventable.

Any fatality or serious injury not only has significant impact on the life and family of those involved, it also has an impact on our whole community. As a result of the fatality of our Marshallese worker earlier this year, KRS has amplified its emphasis on safety. KRS leaders have learned important lessons from this incident and have developed a corrective action plan to make Kwajalein a safer place for us all to work and live. Over the next year many of you will be seeing changes in your workplace. Operating procedures, to include job safety analysis and training techniques, are areas where changes will be most evident.

Our leaders and managers are doing their part to create an environment that allows us to be safe; and we, as a community, also need to take ownership in this worthwhile goal. Our work involves operating marine vessels, flying aircraft, maintaining facilities, operating heavy equipment, working

What's learned as a child is hard to unlearn

Children are sponges. They soak up everything around them and their first impressions will stay with them for a lifetime. What they learn from their parents or other adults, their friends, their school mates and clergy, is gospel to them. What they are told is what they believe to be the truth and they carry that truth with them into adulthood.

The recent incident involving actor Mel Gibson and his drunken tirade is a perfect example.

Gibson was raised by a father who is apparently a nut case who denies the Holocaust ever took place and hates Jews. Like many people, he uses religion as the basis for his hatred.

That Gibson has put himself in this situation is a shame, but totally his own doing.

And yes, I think that being drunk can make the truth come out of a person.

But to be honest, we all have, or at least have had, preconceptions and prejudices about people of other races, religions, ethnic

So long Hawaii, hello Guam

Matson changing monthly barge service coming from Honolulu to twice-monthly service coming from Guam

By J.J. Klein
Reporter

Say good bye to the barge from Honolulu. On Aug. 15 a new container-carrying ship will pull into port. Starting this month Matson Navigation Company, Inc. is changing its service to Kwajalein from monthly barge service out of Honolulu to container ship service out of Guam every 14 days.

"We are consolidating our RMI [Republic of the Marshall Islands] and FSM [Federated States of Micronesia] services to improve the quality, frequency of service and to reduce cost," said Gary North, Matson senior vice president, Pacific, regarding the switch in Matson's Marshall Islands operations from Honolulu to Guam.

The introduction of this new carrier will bring changes for Kwajalein Range Services. "For us on Kwajalein it has the potential to reduce overtime in supporting the offload of the ship, reduce our stevedore personnel support, as the new ship's personnel will operate the cranes and, over time, allow us to reduce inventories of material stored on island," said Alan Stone, KRS Shipping and Transportation manager.

Service for Kwajalein-bound freight leaving the Richmond, Calif. freight facility for Honolulu will remain unchanged. Changes to the shipping service begin in Honolulu.

Freight in Honolulu will leave for Guam on Matson's new China-Long Beach Express route.

Matson has dedicated five vessels to this route which will originate in Long Beach, Calif., pick up freight in Honolulu, drop off its cargo in Guam and then head for two more ports in China, before returning to Long Beach.

Once in Guam, the containers will be loaded bi-monthly onto the Islander, the container vessel headed for Kwajalein. The Islander is a 425-foot oceangoing, container ship chartered by Matson and capable of transporting 650, 20-foot containers. Containers are loaded into sealed hatches stretching the length of the self-sustaining ship, meaning it has two onboard cranes.

In addition to these changes, Matson will supply KRS with two specialized tractors and three 40-foot trailers which will make offloading the containers easier. KRS will be responsible for maintenance on this new equipment and Matson will supply any parts needed for repair.

Impact on the Kwajalein community will be minimal. "There is an extra leg to the voyage now, but the new container ship is faster than a tug towing a barge, so the time is about the same," said Brian Ponte, KRS Acquisition Services manager. "Because the shipments are still coming from Oakland to Honolulu before coming to Guam and then Kwaj, this does not mean we now have a shorter procurement lead time."

Stone explained further, "Everyone needs to understand that the time it takes to get an item to Kwajalein from the states has not changed. From the time an order is placed by the inventory controller to the time the item arrives here could take as much as 81 days. The difference now is that we do not have to wait an additional 30 days if an item missed the barge to see it, now it will be here just two weeks later."

The benefits to the Kwajalein community as result of the improved service are "fresher food, lower inventory requirements and cost," said North.

"The only real significant change that the residents might see is an improvement in the shelf life quality of the products we normally ship by barge, like the hardy fruits and vegetables such as onions, potatoes, carrots, apples and pears," said Stone. "We would not have to store these items for as long a period in the warehouses and could get fresh shipments more frequently. Other than that, this will be seamless to the Kwaj population."

With shipping operations now centered in Guam, there are concerns regarding the invasive Brown Tree snake. Accidentally introduced to Guam in the early 1950s, the Brown Tree snake is threatening Guam's wildlife population and causing economic losses resulting from snake-induced power outages.

"Interdiction currently consists of trapping snakes at points of access to Guam's air and surface terminals, and inspection of outgoing cargo primarily by the use of specially trained dogs," said Ponte. The fencing surrounding the Port of Guam is set with snake traps at points along the perimeter. Each trap includes a live mouse for bait and is inspected twice weekly for captured snakes.

Matson is changing barge service from Hawaii to shipments from Guam.

Matsunaga turns two-year tour to forty years of living on Kwaj

By J.J. Klein
Reporter

Twenty-three year old Jimmy Matsunaga arrived on Kwajalein July 22, 1966 wearing sunglasses and a full head of jet black hair. Fast forward forty years, the hair has turned white and he is still sporting his trademark sunglasses, but now Matsunaga qualifies for 'old-timers' status as one of the island's longest residing inhabitants.

"I was two months out of the Air Force...job hunting with Hawaiian airlines when I saw an ad for Kwajalein in the newspaper," Matsunaga recalled. "In those days Kwajalein was referred to as working 'down under,' that meant fast money, big money."

Matsunaga high-tailed it to Kwajalein determined to make the big bucks, enjoy the sunshine and then cobble out the 'good life' for himself back in Hawaii.

"I came out here with the intention of staying two years, [but] it was fun in those days," said Matsunaga, Transportation manager with Kwajalein Range Services. "Once you went home that was it, you didn't think about work! There were a lot of sports events and just a lot of things to do.

"Sports out here were very fierce and competitive," said Matsunaga. "On any given day you would see 200 spectators, nowadays there are very few. Sports were popular because the competition was great; there were great teams and great athletes." Name a sport and Matsunaga was on the team. He filled his bachelor days playing handball, volleyball, basketball, slow pitch and mountain ball, a game similar to softball except that the ball is pitched to the batter in a high, arcing lob. The batter has to try and hit the ball on its downward arc, not an easy feat according to Matsunaga.

Reminiscing on his 40 years of living on Kwajalein there are some differences in places, events and attitudes that stand out for Matsunaga.

"Back then everybody got along, there was camaraderie. We worked hard. We played hard. We partied hard. Everything was very aloha out here," lamented Matsunaga. "There was a lot of aloha spirit, the feeling of Hawaii."

Matsunaga attributes that friendly, easy going attitude to the makeup of the residential population at that time. "There were a lot of people from Hawaii, the majority were from Hawaii," continued Matsunaga, "I would say at the highest point there were maybe 5,500 [residents], I would say out of that at least 2,000 were

Hawaiian.”

The resident population was very different in another obvious way 40 years ago, quite simply the lack of women living on the island, observed Matsunaga. “You could count the single women. Most of the bachelorettes were nurses, dental hygienists, I think some school teachers,” commented Matsunaga. “Today times have changed, it’s like the real world here. Look around now ... in every department you see single women and that’s good.”

Matsunaga with daughter Serena

At a wedding in Honolulu Matsunaga met the right woman, Doreen Dunn, and married her in 1970. But Doreen did not move out to Kwajalein until 1977, by that time the Matsunaga’s had a daughter, Serena.

Matsunaga has witnessed the evolution and the disappearance of the infrastructure of Kwajalein over the years, most recently with the explosive reduction of the Pacific Batchelor Quarters. When Matsunaga first came to Kwajalein he lived in the now demolished PBQ on the second floor. “There were no separate quarters; I lived in a cubicle with eight men to a cubicle, no dividers,” recalled Matsunaga. A PBQ cubicle had just enough space for each person to have a twin bed and a locker and space to walk.

For someone who has lived here for so long, it is pretty amazing that Matsunaga has only lived in three different residences over the years. Consider this, on an island where people come and leave monthly, Matsunaga and his wife Doreen are the only family to make a home in Quarters 137-F since its construction in the late 1980s.

Another piece of real estate Matsunaga hated to see go was the Crossroads Restaurant, a dining facility that once stood north of the Oceanview Club. “In the back there was a candlelight dinner area with glass windows looking out over the ocean. In the middle there was a long bar, and in the front was where the guys came straight from work and played shuffleboard and drank beer,” reminisced Matsunaga. “Beer was 25 cents a can then. A good steak was $3.75 and a lobster was $5, they had good food there, very good food.” From the look on his face it is evident Matsunaga has good memories attached to that place.

Matsunaga also misses the Saturday nights he spent at the Richardson Theater where he watched the first movie, stayed for the second movie and then headed to the Café Pacific for the midnight breakfast and socialized with friends. And then a broad smile spreads across his face as he describes the four days McDonalds came to Kwajalein in 1983. The lines were long, but worth standing in just for a taste of a Big Mac.

“Back home you know kids look forward to a carnival, well out here it was the adults who looked forward to the carnival,” said Matsunaga. The annual carnival was a major event on Kwajalein, held in conjunction with a long holiday weekend similar to the state fairs held stateside. It was a carnival filled with food booths, a beer tent, games with prizes and rides, lots of rides. There was a mini-Ferris wheel, a merry-go-round, the caterpillar ride and even a train that ran on authentic tracks. Matsunaga said, “One day was designated Marshallese day. They would send the boats back and forth and thousands of Marshallese would be here.”

Matsunaga is often asked, “How can you live out here forty years?” For Matsunaga there is no answer that hints at a master plan. “Two years became three, three became four, four became five and you know how it goes. After a certain amount of years you don’t even think about the years, time just went by so fast,” explained Matsunaga. “It’s crawling now, but it went [by] fast in the early years.”

Talk to Matsunaga today and he will tell you that he and Doreen have no plans to leave Kwajalein just yet. “We talk about leaving. Everyone has to talk about retiring one day,” said Matsunaga, “but as long as my health is holding up and as long as I’m still contributing, I’m here.” Matsunaga maintained, “When my motor starts sputtering ...let me know, then it’s time to go.”

“Everyone has to talk about retiring one day, but as long as my health is holding up and as long as I’m still contributing I’m here. When my motor starts sputtering ...let me know, then it’s time to go.”

Senseless act

U.S. helicopter performing humanitarian aid comes under fire from Taliban gunman

American Forces Press Service

A U.S. medical evacuation helicopter carrying an injured Afghan child came under attack with small-arms fire Tuesday in Afghanistan's Zabul province, U.S. military officials said.

The incident happened just days after media reports indicated Taliban leaders were urging followers to target U.S. and coalition medical personnel and clergy, officials said.

Army Col. Michael Rose, Task Force Falcon and 10th Combat Aviation Brigade commander, called the attack a senseless and cowardly act. "This crew risked their lives to save this little girl, and the Taliban response to that was to try to shoot down an unarmed helicopter. This makes no sense at all," Rose said.

The 24-month-old Afghan girl was being transferred for treatment for third-degree burns to more than 45 percent of her body. "She basically pulled a pot of boiling oils onto herself," said Army Capt. Patrick Zenk, 159th Medical Company's detachment commander for Regional Command South. "The patient's parent tried to bring the child to Qalat for treatment, but the roads were impassable."

Crewmembers aboard an escort helicopter said they observed small-arms fire directed at the UH-60 Blackhawk medevac helicopter shortly before landing at Forward Operating Base Sweeny, forcing it and an escort helicopter to take evasive measures. A door-gunner on the escort helicopter returned fire, killing the gunman.

The medevac crew successfully transported the child to a U.S. aid station at Forward Operating Base Sweeny. She was then flown by helicopter to a U.S. emergency medical care facility in Kandahar.

Army Sgt. Erik Zlatkin, a surgical specialist with the 759th Forward Surgical Team who helped treat the young patient, said care provided by the 159th flight medics probably saved the child's life. She arrived at the aid station in good condition, he said. "She should be OK," he said.

About a third of the more than 430 medical evacuation missions the unit has performed have been in support of Afghan citizens, Maj. Robert Howe, 159th Medical Company commander, said.

"Our crews know that every time we launch, there is a very real possibility that someone out there wishes to do us harm," he said. "We will not be deterred. These missions are critical to helping not only wounded servicemembers, but also Afghans in need."

Pardon our dust

Work is progressing as the floor in the Café Pacific kitchen is dug up in order to replace the drain pipes. Other cooking facilities such as the Mobile Kitchen and Three Palms Snack Bar are taking up the slack while the Café Pacific kitchen is unable to be used.

New vaccine approved

Drug can prevent cervical cancer in young women if administered prior to sexual activity

J.J. Klein
Reporter

Turn a page in a newspaper, catch an advertisement on the television, spot a poster on a city bus, women across the United States are being challenged to "Tell Someone." The advertisements, encourage women to get the facts and then spread the word about the link between the human papillomavirus and cervical cancer.

Half of all women living with cervical cancer are between the ages of 35 and 55. Unbeknownst to them these women were most likely infected with HPV, a sexually transmitted virus and the leading cause of cervical cancer, when they were in their teens and early 20s.

Today the daughters of these women can be immunized with the first vaccine developed to prevent the infection of the virus.

The Food and Drug Administration recently approved the use of the vaccine, Gardasil, for girls and young women ages 9-26 as a preventative strategy against four specific HPV types. Developed and marketed by a major pharmaceutical manufacturer, the vaccine is 95 to 100 percent effective in preventing precancerous cervical lesions only when administered prior to infection and the start of sexual activity. The vaccine will not treat or cure those who have already been infected with HPV.

HPV is an extremely common disease. Nearly 50 percent of all men and women who have had sex will become infected during their lifetime. Most people have never even heard about HPV or even know they are infected. "For most women, the body's own defense system will clear the virus and they don't develop health problems" according to the FDA web site.

But some HPV types can cause abnormal cell growth in the lining of the cervix eventually turning into cancer many years later.

Nearly 10,000 women in the United States will be diagnosed with cervical cancer this year and over 3,500 will die. "The vaccine will literally be a life saver," said Dr. Jill Horner, a physician at the Kwajalein hospital.

Gardasil is a recombinant vaccine that "mimics the disease and creates resistance", it does not contain live or dead virus and can not cause HPV infection according to the FDA web site. The vaccination process is three doses administered over a six month period, injected into the arm or the thigh. Tests results from one U.S. and three multinational studies showed minor side effects such as fever, soreness and redness on the skin where the shot was injected.

Be aware, Gardasil does not protect against all types of HPV, only the four types used in developing the vaccine. There are at least 30 HPV types that are linked to cervical cancer. For this reason it is vital that women continue their routine pap screenings.

The vaccine is not approved for use in males, although one pharmaceutical company does have a current study to see if it would be safe and effective for men.

The HPV-cervical cancer advertisements end with the tagline, "Now that you know, tells someone." Take their advice. Get the word out.

V for Vendetta Based on the graphic novel by Alan Moore, V for Vendetta takes place in an alternate vision of Britain in which a corrupt and abusive totalitarian government has risen to complete power. During a threatening run in with the secret police, an unassuming young woman named Evey (Natalie Portman) is rescued by a vigilante named V (Hugo Weaving) — a caped figure both articulate and skilled in combat. V embodies the principles of rebellion from an authoritarian state, donning a mask of vilified would-be terrorist of British history Guy Fawkes and leading a revolution sparked by assassination and destruction. Evey becomes his unlikely ally, newly aware of the cruelty of her own society and her role in it.

Benchwarmers Three guys with little athletic ability strike a blow for everyone chosen last at recess in this comedy. Clark (Jon Heder), Gus (Rob Schneider), and Richie (David Spade) are three geeky guys who have spent most of their lives being humiliated by bullies and taunted by people with greater hand-eye coordination than they possess (which is nearly everyone). While the three guys love baseball, they've been treated like losers on the diamond ever since their days riding the pine in Little League. One day they stop by a softball field at a local park and a bunch of kids practicing for Little League tryouts try to heckle them into going home. Clark, Gus, and Richie challenge the kids to a game — three against nine — and miraculously don't entirely humiliate themselves. Mel (Jon Lovitz), a guy with an athletically-challenged son of his own, is impressed with the nerdy trio's nerve, and offers to set up a tournament in which the three inept grown-ups will take on the best Little League teams from around the state. Clark, Gus, and Richie accept the offer, and they soon become unlikely heroes to the bullied, clumsy, and awkward everywhere.

American Dreamz The president of the United States (Dennis Quaid) seems to be having a nervous breakdown after picking up a newspaper for the first time in four years, and when his chief of staff (Willem Dafoe) determines to get the commander in chief out of his pajamas and back into the spotlight, the stage is set for a talent contest that the nation will never forget.

Each of these activities presents the opportunity for a serious incident. Add to that the various water sports and our other off duty activities and you can see that we must always be aware of the risks surrounding us. Please always conduct a Safety starts with each one of us making a decision to be safe and being proud that we have accomplished our jobs effectively, efficiently, and safely. Always evaluate, mitigate, and eliminate the risks in your environment, and we will together be able to enjoy our beautiful tropical island life.

groups and those of different sexual orientations. We all believed the stereotypes we learned as children.

I think anyone who says they've never been prejudiced or never believed stereotypes about other people is lying. At least to some degree.

I went to Catholic school in the 1950s. You can guess what I was told about non-Catholics. All Protestants were going straight to hell, and forget about the Jews. They were total toast. And remember, we were taught this even after the Holocaust.

My wife on the other hand was raised as a Southern Baptist and she told me what she learned about Catholics as a child. We were idol worshipers and totally evil and dangerous. If you married a Catholic, you might as well buy your fireproof suit because you were heading south when you died.

Those of us who are old enough remember when John F. Kennedy, a Catholic, was running for president in 1960. Many people actually feared that if he was elected, the Pope would be running the country. Some even believed that all Catholic churches had arsenals in the basements and if Kennedy was elected, they would take over the country.

Do you think I'm kidding about this? I'm serious as a heart attack. You young folks can ask anybody over 50 about it. That's truly the way it was.

Then of course, in the 1950s and 1960s there was the terrible racial prejudice and stereotyping of African-Americans and I was not immune to it. I went to an all-white school and lived in an all-white neighborhood and I heard all the racial jokes and all the slurs and I believed what I heard. Why wouldn't I? It was all I knew.

Thankfully, as an adult, I gradually came to know that the things I had accepted as the truth weren't the truth. I came to realize that people aren't just part of some racial, ethnic or religious group. They are individuals and should be judged by what they do and what kind of lives they lead. Or as Martin Luther King, Jr. said, "by the content of their character and not the color of their skin." But it took me years to learn that.

Parents who teach their children tolerance and acceptance of other people give them a great gift. Their children won't have to spend a lifetime unlearning falsehoods and lies.

Believe me, it's hard to unlearn what you learned as a child.

Just ask Gibson.
