What would our lives be like without credibility?

Credibility.

Think what your life would be like without it. What would your life be like if your employer, supervisor, co-workers and family members didn't trust you, and everytime you said something, they wondered if you were telling the complete truth?

What if you put a spin on everything? What if you always distorted the facts or omitted the facts? Or what if that was just the perception people had of you?

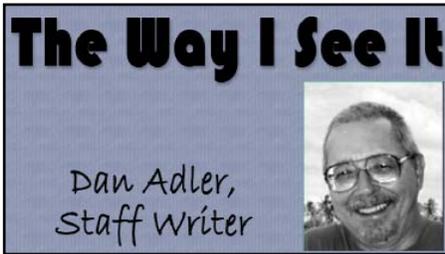

Instilling confidence in people who think you are misrepresenting the facts, or that you are completely out for yourself and no one else, would be pretty much impossible.

What would your life be like without credibility?

On a vastly larger and much more important scale, I believe that's the position our government finds itself in these days.

To refresh your memory, here are a few things that have been going on in our government the past few years.

- The corruption scandals involving lobbyist Jack Abramoff and the investigations of several government officials on corruption charges.
- The 'no-bid' contracts worth billions of dollars for rebuilding in Iraq and the billions of dollars 'lost' or 'unaccounted' for in that country.
- The massive 'pork barrel' spending bills that included millions of dollars for a 'bridge to nowhere,' in Alaska as one example.
- The Medicare prescription drug 'benefit' that has turned out to be not such a good deal for seniors but will cost taxpayers billions of dollars. This law forbids the U.S. government from negotiating with drug companies for lower prices. (Recently, Wal-Mart has announced a discount drug plan that is far less expensive for consumers than the government plan.)

- The incredibly costly energy bill which does nothing to lower the cost or curtail the use of oil, provides no funds for research for an alternative fuel, but does provide massive tax cuts to the oil industry.

- And, of course, that little deal of almost letting an Arab company buy some of our seaports. Remember that one?

- How about the aftermath of Hurricane Katrina in New Orleans? Do you remember the very lucrative 'no-bid' contracts that were given out by the government for rebuilding?

Now get this. There's a law on the books called The Davis-Bacon Act, passed by congress in 1931, that requires federal government contractors to pay locally prevailing wages in the area of the country in which the work is being done. The wages are usually set by pay scales in local union contracts.

Well, after the 'no-bid' contracts were let out for Katrina, the government suspended that law so the contractor(s) could hire 'lower wage' workers to come in and work on the contracts. But, that wasn't enough it seems. The government also suspended laws that require contractors to get proof of citizenship before hiring workers! Do you think maybe a few illegals or, as some say, 'undocumented' workers got hired for those jobs? It was only after the media found out about it and raised a stink that the government reinstated the law's provisions and contractors had to start paying proper wages and getting proof of citizenship before hiring workers.

But, until that law was reinstated, we had illegals taking work

Bush condemns North Korea's nuclear test

By Steven Donald Smith
American Forces Press Service

North Korea's claim that it conducted its first-ever nuclear test today constitutes a threat to international peace and security, President Bush said this morning at the White House.

"The United States condemns this provocative act," he said. Bush said the U.S. is still working to confirm the North Korean claim.

South Korea's Yonhap news agency reported the apparent nuclear test was conducted in Hwaderi, North Korea. The U.S. Geological Survey said it had detected a tremor of 4.2 magnitude on the Korean Peninsula.

"North Korea has defied the will of the international community, and the international community will respond," the president said.

Bush said he talked to leaders of China, South Korea, Japan and Russia this morning. "We reaffirmed our commitment to a nuclear-free Korean Peninsula, and all of us agreed the proclaimed actions taken by North Korea are unacceptable and deserve immediate response by the United Nations Security Council," he said.

The U.N. Security Council held an emergency session in New York City this morning to discuss possible actions against North Korea. The Security Council has said such an act could lead to severe consequences, like economic sanctions.

The North Korean regime is one of the world's leading proliferators of missile technology, including transfers to Iran and Syria, Bush said. "The transfer of nuclear weapons or material by North Korea to state or non-state entities would be considered a grave threat to the United States, and we would hold North Korea fully accountable for the consequences of such action," he said.

The U.S. remains committed to diplomacy, the president said, but will meet the full range of its deterrent and security commitments.

He said North Korean threats would not lead to a brighter future for North Korean people nor weaken the resolve of the United States and its allies.

Today's claim by North Korea serves only to raise tension, while depriving the North Korean people of the increased prosperity and better relations the world has offered. "The oppressed and impoverished people of North Korea deserve their brighter future," he said.

North Korea, officially known as the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, is an isolated, repressive regime of 23 million people that has experienced wide-scale starvation under its current leader, Kim Jong-il.

The communist country also drew international ire when it test-fired seven ballistic missiles in July.

Ebeye power plant generators repaired, back in service

Island enjoys continuous power after eight months of power losses

By J. J. Klein
Reporter

Ebeye residents have continuous power, ending eight months of rolling brown outs, after power plant generators were repaired and put back online.

Power was restored to Ebeye on Sept. 29, when an engineer with the Cummings Engine Company of Brisbane, Australia arrived in the Republic of the Marshall Islands to connect the repaired generators and get them back online.

An hour after arriving by plane, Nick Phillips of the Cummings Company was whisked off to the Ebeye power plant, taken to the generators and told, "Fix it." By 8 p.m. the same day the island was back at full power.

"The engines were rebuilt and they came over to Ebeye," said Phillips. "I just needed to finish connecting up the electrical systems on them, check voltages, check the frequency and check that they were doing what they were supposed to before we put them online."

Phillips was assisted in making repairs by Daniel Tokeak, an electrician with the Kwajalein Atoll Joint Utility Resource.

Two of the three Cummings generators were repaired and completely serviceable, the third generator is waiting for a part due to arrive this week according to Tokeak, and should be up and running within two weeks. A back-up Caterpillar generator is also functioning at 100 percent.

Two Cummings generators were sent to Australia, stripped down and rebuilt then shipped back to Ebeye. While the generators are the same engines with new parts, the electronic controls, specifically the automatic voltage regulators, were upgraded to the latest systems, said Phillips.

A 12-month supply of all maintenance materials—air—water and oil filters—was purchased by KAJUR to ensure unimpeded operations. Phillips also spent most of the week training Tokeak, who will in turn train nine power plant operators to make any necessary future repairs to the engines.

"They know for the next 12 months they have all the spares required," said Phillips. "Daniel has my contact number in Australia...he can contact us direct at Cummings, and we can supply any spares required direct."

Gone, for now, are the four-hours-on, four-hours-off power shortage that made living on Ebeye a hardship for many residents. On the day Phillips checked out of the Kwaj Lodge, a maid, an Ebeye resident, came to Phillips to thank him for getting the power back on; she wasn't the only one.

"I've had a lot of people thanking me for getting the power back on," said Phillips. "People seem to be sleeping a lot better because they've got the air conditioning running through the night again."

World of experiences

Pharmacy tech adventurer at heart

By J.J. Klein
Reporter

Anyone who has picked up a prescription at the hospital pharmacy has probably crossed paths with Jason Samson. Behind the very professional and pleasant demeanor is the heart of an adventurer with seven years in the U.S. Army under his belt.

Samson joined the Army right out of high school looking for a way to continue his education.

"I didn't actually plan to join the military, but towards the end of my schooling in high school I was looking for money to go to school and, you know, they advertise about the service and the GI bill and being able to take night courses," said Samson. "So I looked at it and thought it would be an adventure to try it out, and went for the ASVAB [Armed Services Vocational Aptitude Battery] and the next thing I knew the recruiter was hunting me down."

A short time later, this young man from Ebeye was on his way to basic training at Ft. Knox, Ky.

"Oh, yes," reminisced Samson with a grin on his face. "I will never forget my first day. I got off the bus and they were being nice to us, as soon as the bus took off that's when all the screaming and yelling started.

"They dropped us in the snow [to do] push-ups. That was my first time touching the snow. And it was miserable, terrible," Samson continued, laughing. "I couldn't feel my fingers, my toes. They were just numb."

At the end of basic training Samson was relieved, not to be leaving basic training, but to be heading to the warmer weather of Ft. Sam Houston, Texas, where he trained to become a medic. From there Samson was sent to work in the Emergency Room at Kenner Army Hospital, Ft. Lee, Va.

As a high school teenager, Samson spent his summers helping out at the Ebeye hospital and was fascinated by the medical field. It only seemed natural for him to train in the medical corp.

"I got a call about a paratrooper who went through a tree and landed on a house trailer and he cracked his neck. I was running scenarios in my mind as we [my partner and I] were driving over there. We get there and [the paratrooper] says, 'Yeah, I can walk, I just can't move my head.' Then all that training started flowing out, you react without thinking.

"The first call I went to really opened my eyes to the profession," said Samson, "really gave me the desire to try and advance in the field.

"I got a call about a paratrooper who went through a tree and landed on a house trailer and he cracked his neck. I was running scenarios in my mind as we [my partner and I] were driving over there," continued Samson. "We get there and [the paratrooper] says, 'Yeah, I can walk, I just can't move my head.' Then all that training started flowing out, you react without thinking."

At the beginning of his Army career, a bit of loneliness set in, normal for any new recruit far from home, but particularly resonant for someone who is experiencing a new culture and always the only Marshallese in the crowd.

"It was really lonely. I didn't see anyone from here; I couldn't speak [my] native language. I just had to tough it out," remembered Samson.

One thing that could have chased the homesick blues away would have been some comfort food from home, in particular – fish.

"If I could have eaten fish... that would have helped tremendously with the homesickness and loneliness. I tried every food that came my way," said Samson, thinking back to those early days at basic training. Of course, Samson couldn't afford to be choosy at the chow line with a drill sergeant over his shoulder.

Following a tour in Korea, Samson was sent to Ft. Carson, Colo., where he did a rotational deployment to Egypt. Looking back, Ft. Carson was his favorite duty station and where he finally met up with four other Marshallese men. It was the first time Samson, and for that matter the other men, had been stationed at the same post with fellow countrymen.

Ask him if he spent any time with his compatriots and he is quick to reply, "Every weekend.

"We just got to know each other and hung around all weekend, every weekend," continued Samson, "that knocked off those loneliness feelings of all those years."

Samson has experienced a lot of "first" as an adult, thanks to the Army.

"My biggest first - standing at the foot of the pyramids. They are huge. It's just unbelievable how they could have built that so many years ago without all the technologies we have today. It's amazing," said Samson. "You just wonder, 'How did they lift these humongous, thousand pound bricks up that high?'"

Another 'first' for this young man, who grew up shuttling between the tropical islands of Majuro and Ebeye, was snowboarding.

"I could barely walk the next day," said Samson laughing, "but you get the hang of it after 100 falls."

With all these new experiences, why would Samson leave the Army? He left for the same reason he started with the Army, education.

"I really wanted to do some schooling, but the units that I was with got deployed a lot and we never really had the time to participate in night classes," said Samson, and "I just wanted to do more schooling."

A lot of people like to think that they embody the "I'll try anything, once!" attitude. For Samson that really is a way of life. He brought that attitude with him when he enlisted in the military and lived it out as a young Soldier.

Wounded warriors fighting another battle

By Gerry J. Gilmore
American Forces Press Service

Two Army combat veterans who both lost something dear in the war against terrorism say they are determined to keep on battling, and proving it as they prepare to run the Army 10-Miler race tomorrow.

In December 2005, Spc. James Stuck was wounded by an improvised explosive device blast in Kirkuk, Iraq. His right leg was later amputated at mid-shin.

Spc. Joseph Keck, an Afghanistan veteran, lost his lower left arm just below his elbow after being injured in an IED explosion near Kandahar in July.

Yet, Stuck and Keck are upbeat as they continue to recover from their wounds. They also will run in tomorrow's Army 10-Miler race as members of the Missing Parts in Action team from Walter Reed Army Medical Center here.

The two soldiers related their experiences today during an Army 10-Miler press conference yesterday at a local suburban hotel.

"I went skiing five weeks after I'd lost my leg," Stuck, a 22-year-old from Pittsburgh, recalled. "So, it just shows what you can accomplish." He has also taken up kayaking and snowboarding since he was injured.

Noting he's come a long way since being injured, Stuck said his goal at the 10-Miler "is to just finish the race."

Stuck attributed his rapid recovery to being able to come to terms with his condition and the adoption of a positive outlook.

"Hey, I'm lucky to be alive," Stuck said. "So, you accept it. There's nothing you can do to go into the past to change it."

Keck, who hails from Rockford, Ill., said he has completed 12-mile runs during unit physical training sessions. The 22-year-old said he's savoring the opportunity to compete in the 10-Miler.

"It's something I know I can do," Keck said. "Just, now, I'm looking at how fast I can do it."

Besides competing at the 10-Miler, Keck said he also anticipates taking his motorcycle for a spin when he goes home for a visit in the spring.

Keck said he is determined, like Stuck, to make a full recovery. He also accepts the loss of his arm, having realized soon after being wounded that he might lose it.

"When they told me that they were going to amputate it, I already knew," Keck recalled. His recovery has "been a little hill to climb," he acknowledged.

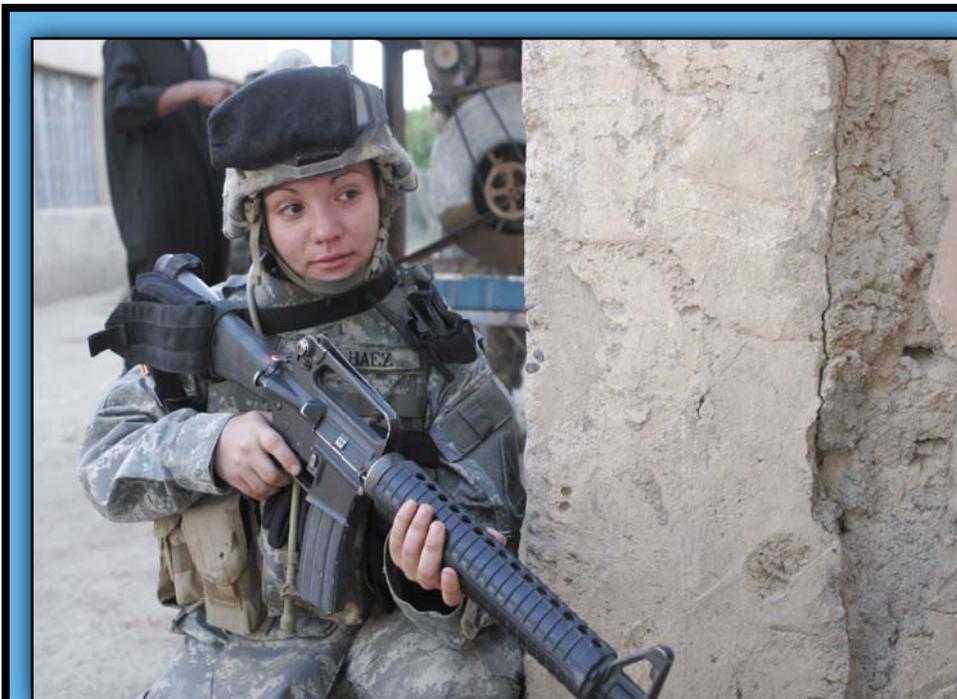

However, Keck today reiterated his determination "to carry on," as he prepares for the 10-Miler.

Army Capt. Matthew Scherer, an Iraq War veteran, accompanied Stuck and Keck at the Army 10-Miler press conference. Born in Joliet, Ill., Scherer, 35, is the chief of Walter Reed's amputee physical therapy section. He's also a supporting therapist and co-organizer of the MPIA team.

The MPIA team first competed at the Army 10-Miler in 2004, Scherer said. The 10-Miler "is a world-class race," he said, where wounded warriors can come together in sports and work as a team.

Scherer said the MPIA team is co-sponsored by the U.S. Armed Forces Amputee Patient Care Program. This year's MPIA team has 14 wounded servicemembers representing all the military services and 18 physical-therapist supporters, he said.

One of the AFAPCP's goals "is to help folks reach their maximum level of functional capability after they've lost a limb" or sustained other types of severe injuries, Scherer said.

from people in New Orleans who had just lost everything and desperately needed jobs. Well heck, that sounds fair to me, how about you?

I could go on, but I only have so much room on these pages.

Credibility. It's so hard to build it up and it's so easy to lose and very, very hard to get back once it's lost.

In a democracy, any democracy, the government is built on the people's trust. A government in a democracy has to have the citizens' confidence that it's doing what's right and what's in the best interests of the country and not operating in a perceived 'culture of corruption.'

It's a terrible shame that poll ratings for our government officials are dismal.

Those polls reflect that a majority of people don't feel many of our elected officials are doing what's good for the country and not just special interests.

For our nation, our way of life, and our government to survive in these turbulent times, trust and confidence have to be assured. We have to know that our government is a government for the people and not those with the most money and influence.

Don't get me wrong. There are many hard-working people in government who do their best to watch out for us and the nation's best interest and they deserve our thanks and our votes. Voting is how we reward those who do a good job for us.

If we citizens don't demand and insist upon good government and we don't hold our elected officials accountable for what they do by our votes, then guess what? We'll never have the government we want. We'll have the government we deserve.

Credibility. What would our lives be like without it?
