Get educated about infant, pregnancy loss

By Sharee Moore
1-327th Inf. Rgt.

Grief snuck up behind me and put a knife in my back. It caught me off guard, spun me around and landed me flat on my face.

My baby was dead and there was nothing anyone could do or say to change the horrible truth. Initially, family and friends rushed to my aid. There were cards, e-mails, phone calls and hugs. Within two weeks, all the commotion slowed to a halt.

In a month, friends and acquaintances acted as though nothing happened. My husband and I were alone in our grief. After three months, most people expected me to have moved on. By the end of the year, I believed I was crazy because I couldn't conform to others' grief schedules. www.MedicalNewsToday.com states that more than four million babies across the globe die each year. In the United States, annually, another 800,000 pregnancies end in miscarriage, states a transcript of Sound Medicine, Indiana University School of Medicine's radio broadcast.

Letter to the editor

It couldn't be sibling rivalry

My brother, Bob Nast, after eight long years of trying, finally won a bag in the Kwaj Open. As chairperson of the event I have received numerous calls about the fact that his flight (Men's A Flight) was not in the paper. Most people realize that this was not purposeful; however, one budding psychologist has suggested that I subconsciously omitted his flight because of repressed feelings of aggression from our formative years. I thought about that for about two seconds and went, "Nah...just a mistake!" If you could please publish the five winners of the A Flight I would really appreciate it. I want to congratulate Bob Nast, Gerry Wolf, Lloyd Jordan, Bob Allard and Jimmy Feldpausch for your outstanding play in the tournament. Sorry guys and thanks for your understanding.

Aviation officer wishes to clarify air traffic article

As U.S. Army Kwajalein Atoll's aviation officer, I was intimately involved with the transition from the Federal Aviation Administration operated control tower and am also involved with the current U.S. Army operated tower.

After reading the recent article on the transition in The Hourglass, I find it necessary to clarify a few issues that were discussed in this article as well as some rumors that have circulated among the community in regard to air traffic safety.

The most prevalent, as well as the most inaccurate rumor that abounded was the one that implied that the lack of a manned control tower created an unsafe aviation environment. What many people do not realize is that the vast majority of airfields in the United States are operated without manned control towers, including those with from four to five times the amount of air traffic that we experience.

Federal aviation regulations delineate very specific procedures for aircraft operating at airfields with no control towers. These procedures are understood

Barge operations create many risks, hazards

Safety awareness stressed to minimize chance of accidents

By Nell Drumheller
Editor

More than 12,000 tons of cargo is transported to the U.S. Army Kwajalein Atoll via waterways each year.

The twice-a-month barge arrivals to the Kwajalein dock bring about a flurry of activity; two T-Rex Super Stackers and five tractor trailers remove containers from the boat and move the product to the supply complex to transport containers.

"It takes approximately 24-36 hours to complete the ship operations," Alan Stone, Kwajalein Range Services Supply and Transportation manager said. Ship operations are normally from 7 a.m. to 9 p.m.

Between the heavy equipment and the hustle-bustle of laborers the dock area becomes a high risk area.

"The entire ship operation has many areas of risk," Stone said. "The lifting of the containers off the ship creates an area where stevedoring personnel must avoid being under the suspended load."

He added that weather conditions can affect the hazards. "They [the stevedoring personnel] must also be attentive of the containers swinging in the wind. Personnel must stand clear of the containers as they are loaded onto the tractor trailers, and if they are not placed correctly they could tip off the trailer."

Safety concerns don't end at the dock. The cranes on the ship load the containers onto tractor trailers which transport the containers to the cold storage, retail and GSK warehouses. "Once the container is delivered to the supply warehouse the T-Rex must lift it off the trailer and place it in the staging area. The T-Rex is a large piece of equipment with a limited view when moving containers. These containers must be moved very cautiously to avoid collisions with other equipment and to be vigilant for personnel in the area. Personnel driving or walking in front of, behind or under the suspended load of the T-Rex could be killed or severely injured," Stone said.

Other containers are staged next to Building 702 for distribution the following day to warehouse 993 and other locations on Kwajalein according to Stone.

The hazard areas are marked with yellow tape. "The area around the supply and retail warehouse is cordoned off to keep all personnel and equipment not required to support the ship operations out of the area. This allows the T-Rex and tractor trailers to move freely through the area to transport containers. Allowing open access to this area would create a severe safety problem with large equipment operating in the same area with personnel walking and biking through," Stone said. Stone added, "All island personnel must not enter the supply area during ship operations by foot or bicycle while the road closure signs and caution tape is in place. All vehicle traffic may only enter for work related purposes by using the supply road access behind Building 702. Vehicle access to this area is not to be used to pick up or drop off personnel at the dock security checkpoint. This includes during the lunch hour and at the end of the normal work day."

Facing new world of challenges

Relocated Marshallese demonstrate courage, sense of adventure

By J.J. Klein
Reporter

By the time Michelle Lebje-Langinbelik landed at the airport in Huntsville, Ala. she had taken the necessary steps to get family passports, immunization records, birth certificates in order and participated in a relocation information session on Kwajalein. But all that preparation wasn't enough to erase her fear of the unknown about relocating to Huntsville.

Along with Lebje-Langinbelik, five other Marshallese Kwajalein Range Services employees made the thoughtful and difficult decision to move from Kwajalein when their jobs were relocated to Huntsville last summer.

"All six of the Marshallese employees who chose to relocate to Huntsville and the family members who are accompanying them...have demonstrated great courage and sense of adventure in agreeing to make this journey," Dave Norwood, KRS vice president and deputy program manager said.

Moving is always a stressful undertaking, factor in moving to a completely different country and the anxiety is ratcheted up quite a bit. The four Marshallese employees, interviewed, carefully considered and weighed their decisions to move with their jobs.

"I remember before I moved here the hardest thing was leaving family members behind and it took me a lot of time to think about this transition," said Mildren Bejang, employed with KRS for two years on Kwajalein. "It took lots of pressure...I did ask God to guide me with this matter."

Bejang is glad he made the move with his wife and son, and now hopes to bring his mother. "I think she'll like it over here as I do," Bejang said.

"It was [a] hard and tough decision to make," said Sepe Shrew, a KRS employee since the company take-over, "because we don't understand the change we're going through, what situation may arise."

Before the Marshallese employees could begin to consider the enormity of moving stateside, Norwood met with them on two occasions to provide the necessary information needed to make well-informed decisions to transfer and answer questions they might have.

"We covered a whole range of information that was focused on the impacts we could foresee," said Norwood, "especially in terms of the types of living expenses that they would have to be ready to undertake. We provided information on things like the expected cost of housing, the cost to own and operate a vehicle, local health care system, taxes and compulsory education requirements.

"I don't think most of us can truly appreciate the extent of the culture shock that they have experienced, involving such impacts as the language differences, the volume of traffic, the vastness of the area, the differences in weather and climate, and even the proliferation of different types of bread in the grocery store," continued Norwood.

Regardless of any amount of preparation, there were surprises and difficulties inherent in a move to a new country, for everyone associated with this move. All the relocated Marshallese employees spoke of the difficulty in securing U.S. Social Security numbers.

"Homeland Security issues made it harder than we expected to obtain Social Security cards, and that caused a delay in obtaining permanent lodging, driver's licenses, and bank accounts," said Norwood. "We think we are over that hump now. We have learned some lessons with this group of pioneers, and we will be better prepared for future relocations."

Some difficulties faced by these workers were directly related to cultural differences and experiences. Managing finances proved to be complicated for Shrew, "When I got here, it was difficult to work out a viable budget."

She admitted, "When I first arrived, everything surprised me. There were big stores teeming with people,

With such a widespread problem, infant and pregnancy loss awareness should be a top priority for our society and the medical community. To meet this need, in 1988, former President Ronald Reagan proclaimed the month of October Pregnancy and Infant Loss Awareness month.

The following is a list of suggestions you can use today to increase sensitivity and make a difference in one hurting parent's life this month and beyond:

10 tips for families and friends

- Allow the bereaved parent to grieve in their own way and don't forget that dads hurt, too.
- Never advise a parent to "get over it," "move on," or "don't cry."
- Never "empathize" by sharing a story about your dead pet, grandmother or Uncle Lester. It just isn't the same.
- Never say "If there is anything you need, call me." He or she won't be fully functional and will have zero energy to make or remember phone calls.
- Offer your help by making strong, specific suggestions like: Allow me to help with your laundry, cooking, planning of the memorial service, informing others of the family's loss, paying the bills, providing or arranging childcare for surviving children, etc.
- Use kind phrases like: "I'm so sorry," "I can't imagine your pain," "my heart breaks for you," "I don't understand how you feel, but I'm willing to listen," "I don't know what to say," "I love you." For the most part, sit quietly and listen.

- Know the signs and symptoms of suicide and depression; don't hesitate to demand professional help.
 - Write down and acknowledge the baby's name, birth and death dates. To forget is heartbreaking.
 - Expect your loved one to relapse during the weeks leading up to the expected delivery date, one year anniversary and first birth date. Be supportive and know this relapse is normal now and in years to come.
 - Get informed about the grief process! Buy or borrow a book about infant and pregnancy loss.
- For medical professionals
- "It," "fetus," "fetal demise," "GBS baby," "SIDS case," "aborted fetus" and other medical jargon are unacceptable terminology in the parent's presence. Instead use the baby's name or terms like "baby boy," "baby," "little one" or similar.
 - Patient care involves the physical and mental. Don't get so busy tending to the physical that you avoid taking the time to just be there and listen.
 - Talk to the patient about what they can expect to see, feel and hear before, during and after a miscarriage or stillbirth delivery. Describe how the baby will look and what the parent can expect from labor pain and the procedure for delivery.

- Never just hand a stillborn baby to his mother without cleaning and swaddling the baby in a blanket. Offer to take pictures. The parents will value these pictures later.
- Don't take the baby away until the parents give permission. This is the last opportunity to parent their child.
- At follow-up visits, acknowledge their loss and let them know you have not forgotten.
- As a general practice physician, never try to give advice outside your area of expertise. It is insulting to your patient.
- At routine appointments, never become so detached that you rattle off questions about the patient's loss as if it were an everyday occurrence.
- It's okay to cry with or for your patient.

Although thousands of grief support resources are available now more than ever before, don't underestimate the impact one person can make. Get educated about infant and pregnancy loss, show compassion and reach out to the hurting.

Making a difference starts with you and me.

and many roads and highways were crammed with cars."

"[What] surprised me the most was the cost of food in the store[s] was really cheaper than [in the Marshall Islands]," said Herbi Abija, who works in cataloging within the Supply department.

"Sometimes I wear my Marshallese dresses to the stores and people would stare at me like there's no tomorrow," Lebje-Langinbelik said with a giggle.

To support these employees transition through the culture shock and help them cope with their individual relocation needs, KRS established a formal sponsorship program. All six transfers were sponsored by various Huntsville employees, who welcomed them with warmth and generosity.

"People here that I'm working with are very, very friendly. They made this transition seem pretty easy," Bejang said. "They came and picked us up from the terminal and showed us around town, and I want it to thank the staff in Huntsville, Ala., you guys are awesome."

"Here you can feel free to visit people's home, share their holidays and enjoy their family," said Shrew. "They will enjoy welcoming you and be pleased if you accept their hospitality."

"The only thing that surprised me the most was the way the people in our office have been treating us," Lebje-Langinbelik said "They've been so nice, helpful, supportive, and they even made donations for us and our families."

Before the Marshallese employees set foot in Alabama their new coworkers created a local donation program and put out a call for items which might help the new arrivals in their transition.

"The response from the local community was overwhelming, as we received dozens of small household appliances and furnishings, several items of furniture, and literally hundreds of items of fall and winter clothing," said Norwood.

Looking back over the last few months, Lebje-Langinbelik said the transition to her new environment, although not without challenges, went relatively well. "I'm just so glad that I felt so special and welcomed from the time I landed here at the Huntsville airport 'til now."

"They may sing our praises," said Norwood, "[but] it is the Marshallese who have done the heavy lifting, taken all the risks, and who deserve our admiration for what they've done."

Cleaning up

Adopt-An-Area keeps Roi, Kwaj beautiful

By J.J. Klein
Reporter

“When you see that stray cup or flying piece of candy wrapper, pick it up and put it where it belongs,” said Susannah Jones, Kwajalein Range Services Community Activities Operations supervisor. “I’m sure many of us remember the slogan, Give a Hoot, Don’t Pollute, well that’s what the Adopt-An-Area program is all about.”

The Adopt-An-Area program allows residents and organizations to adopt a designated area on Kwajalein and Roi-Namur for a year and maintain that area by cleaning up man-made litter. To sign-up volunteers submit a registration form with the Community Activities Office, and then select an available area from the Adopt-An-Area map. Each individual or group then determines its own cleaning schedule.

Kwajalein resident Tom Anderson chose Area 39, a grassy section next to Camp Hamilton, because he thought such a beautiful beach should remain clean and the Kwajalein Outrigger Club will be using the area for the outrigger canoes. Anderson tries to patrol his area twice a week picking up the trash that has drifted in from the lagoon. But Anderson is only one of a handful of community members who have signed up with the program.

So far the all-volunteer program hasn’t had a huge response from the community. Out of 40 areas for adoption on Kwajalein only four organizations, two individuals and one family have adopted an area. Roi-Namur hasn’t fared any better, all 11 areas on the island are still available for adoption.

Island residents can follow the example of children, specifically Girl Scout Troop 4, in adopting this project. Every Saturday after school, the girls in Troop 4 head over to the playground at Emon Beach to clean up their area.

The year-long commitment begins March 1 through February 28, but Jones said anyone interested in signing up with the program before March can register now and then renew their commitment in February.

The KRS Community Activities department is revitalizing the program to compliment U.S. Army Kwajalein Atoll Commander Col. Stevenson Reed’s island beautification initiative. There are plans to remove all old signs and replace them with the names of the individuals or groups maintaining the area and the area number.

“I hope to expand the program a bit to include an Adopt-an-Area recognition and renewal event once a year,” said Jones, “and possibly other community service opportunities to encourage the entire community to do their part to keep the island free of man-made litter.”

and followed by all rated pilots. Given the low density of traffic at Kwajalein, these procedures provided a completely safe aviation environment. During the transition from FAA to U. S. Army controllers, all aircraft transiting to and from Kwajalein were controlled by the FAA's Oakland Center. Further, considering the high level of experience of pilots at Kwajalein, this is probably one of the safest air traffic environments in the world. I put my wife and kids on these planes frequently, and do not have to think twice about how safe they are. I want to ensure that the community understands the importance that all Department of the Army, FAA and host nation air traffic agencies place on flight safety, and that rules and regulations are strictly adhered to. Flight safety in the USAKA aviation environment has been, is, and will continue to be priority number one.
