Thanks for medical team effort

A little while back I had an accident on my bike which resulted in an injury to my left knee.

I want to give a big thank you to nurse Carolyn Koopman and the Roi-Namur Fire Department personnel who assisted me that evening.

Koopman worked all day and wound up working all night taking care of me, so a special thanks goes out to her. I've been here eight years and I've heard the naysayer's comments about the hospital.

But I found from my personal experience, learned the hard way, that the hospital and its staff took exceptional care of me — better than a lot of other places I've experienced.

I want to thank Dr. Lance Ray, Dr. John Janoski, Ivy Springer, Sue Gentry, Marty Bazar, Neal, Hudson and Thompson (sorry I don't remember their last names), the chopper crew and Kwajalein Fire Department. I want to also thank my case worker, Janet McPhatter, and the Travel Office people who helped me on my flight to Hono (no fun by the way, contrary to certain beliefs). Thanks again for everything.

I would like to caution every one about being more careful on bikes. It only takes seconds to change your life in a negative way as I've experienced.

I was told that it was a good thing that alcohol was not a factor as that can complicate things a lot.

But now I know that if I need help, we have a top-notch medical facility staffed by very competent, caring and professional people who are a real asset to a small island like this.

And to those who may beg to differ with me on this, just remember they're the only game in town.

Thank you,

— George Wise

Distress call sends U.S. Army Kwajalein Atoll rescue helicopter, police to aid stranded boat

By Nell Drumheller
Editor

On June 22 an early morning call from the Republic of the Marshall Islands Police on Ebeye initiated a flurry of activity that resulted in the rescue of the boat Li-Jako.

The boat was approximately 20 miles south of Kwajalein. “The boat was dead in the water, they were taking water over the sides,” explained Alan Taylor of the U.S. Army Kwajalein Atoll Host Nation Office. “There were 38 people on board. All of the women and children were sick.” They were no where near land.

Standard policy for a stranded, in distress, or lost vessel is that the RMI government deploys the RMI patrol boat Lomor or contacts the U.S. Embassy in Majuro. A representative from the U.S. Embassy notifies the U.S. Coast Guard and a search and rescue is initiated.

“RMI typically would request support through the Embassy to get coast guard support. But the location of the vessel in the vicinity of Kwajalein made USAKA involvement,” Taylor explained. He added, “The boat was in enough distress or danger that they couldn’t wait for the Lomor to come from Majuro.”

And so, in the early hours of June 22, USAKA pilots climbed into their helicopter and like cavalry of old, went to the rescue. They headed out over the water in search of a lone craft bobbing in the waves.

“The UH-1 started a pie search-type pattern on a 165 degree heading at an 18 mile initial arc,” explained the pilot. “The aircraft searched as far as south/ southwest of Lib.”

Meanwhile, USAKA and the RMI Representatives

“We were 20 nautical miles south of Kwajalein, we could hear the helicopter talking to Harbor Control. Harbor Control was in contact with someone who was in contact with the disabled vessel. Harbor Control said that the vessel had the helicopter in sight.”

Lt. Mike Herrington, Kwajalein Marine Police

Kwajalein Marine Police boat SR-001 tows the Li-Jako after answering a distress call from the stranded boat. A helicopter from Kwajalein also joined in the search which found the Li-Jako near Lib Island.

coordinated with Harbor Control and at approximately 5:10 a.m. the Kwajalein Marine Police section was notified that a Marshallese vessel was stranded. The initial report was that approximately 50 people were on board, the Li-Jako had lost her prop, was dead in the water and taking on water, according to Sgt. First Class Joseph R. Williams of the USAKA Provost Marshal’s office. “The Kwajalein Marine Police Section led by Lt. Mike Herrington immediately reacted by retrieving information that was available and preparing SR-001 for search and rescue operations,” Williams said.

Williams provided a report that said, “At 5:30 a.m. Herrington, Sgt. Dale Finley, Officers Abimelek Danny and James Langitor got under way heading 142 degrees after SAR Pass toward Namu to begin the search and rescue efforts for the disabled vessel.”

Herrington said at the beginning of the search and rescue effort, all he knew was, “The vessel was on its way back from Namu Atoll and was dead in the water, taking on water.”

“We were 20 nautical miles south of Kwajalein, we could hear the helicopter talking to Harbor Control,” Herrington said. “Harbor Control was in contact with someone who was in contact with the disabled vessel. Harbor Control said that the vessel had the helicopter in sight.”

Since the Li-Jako had the helicopter insight, Herrington radioed the helicopter and got its exact location in longitude and latitude.

“The Li-Jako reported sighting the aircraft, but we could not see the boat,” explained the helicopter pilot. “The visibility was approximately four miles with some rain. The aircraft flew at altitudes between 1,000 and 1,500 feet for the best advantage point.”

Due to poor visibility the disabled vessel was never located by the helicopter and the helicopter returned to Kwajalein to refuel, according to Williams.

“With the current fuel load on the aircraft and the sudden nature of the mission, we had approximately 45 minutes of on station time before we had to return for fuel,” the Army pilot said.

However, if the helicopter crew had sighted the boat, they had a plan of action. “If we had found the boat, we would have tried to ascertain the condition of the passengers, marked their position and passed it to the SAR boat,” the pilot said. “Also if possible establish radio communications.”

“Even though the helicopter had not made contact with the disabled vessel, Herrington and crew, after hearing radio traffic that the vessel spotted the helicopter overhead changed direction to 245 degrees heading in the direction of Lib Island,” Williams said.

At 7:45 a.m. SR-001’s crew spotted the disabled vessel and at 8 a.m. SR-001 came along the vessel 25 nautical-miles from Ebeye, in the proximity of Lib Island according to Williams.

Meanwhile, the helicopter was ready to assist if needed. “The UH-1 was on the ramp at Kwajalein refueling to go back out and continue the search when it was reported that the SAR boat had made contact with the Li-Jako,” the pilot said.

“All passengers aboard were in good health with no apparent injuries or losses,” Williams said. “SR-001 and crew tied up to the Li-Jako and began to tow her back to the Ebeye Pier at 8:05 a.m.”

“The seas were a good size and the direction of travel was into them. We broke the forward bit on the Li-Jako and broke our tow line three times. The weight of the vessel would only let us travel an average of six knots,” Herrington said.

SR-001 arrived at Ebeye Pier with the disabled vessel at 1 p.m.

“We’re happy to be good neighbors,” Taylor said.

Injured servicemembers have two financial aid plans

By Gerry J. Gilmore
American Forces Press Service

Servicemembers who've suffered serious injuries resulting from their wartime service can get financial help thanks to two congressionally legislated programs, a senior U.S. military officer said Tuesday.

Congress established the Traumatic Servicemembers Group Life Insurance program in 2005 in response to the experiences of some former and current military members who found themselves financially strapped after they suffered severe injuries during the war against terrorism. Coverage applies to active-duty and reserve-component members.

"This program provides up to $100,000 per event, depending on (the type of) injury," Army Col. John Sackett, a disability compensation expert with U.S. Army Human Resources Command in Alexandria, Va., said during a telephone interview with online journalists and "bloggers."

All servicemembers covered under the Servicemembers Group Life Insurance program, whether active duty, reserve or National Guard, were enrolled for TSGLI coverage on Dec. 1, 2005.

To date, the Army has paid out a total of more than $130 million under TSGLI, Sackett said.

The TSGLI benefit has both retroactive and prospective aspects, Sackett said. The benefit is provided retroactively for servicemembers who suffered severe combat-zone-related injuries between Oct. 7, 2001, and Dec. 1, 2005, he said. The prospective aspect, he added, applies to servicemembers with injuries received "anytime, anywhere" from Dec. 1, 2005, forward.

Currently, TSGLI doesn't offer compensation for veterans who've developed post-traumatic stress disorder as the result of battlefield service, Sackett said.

"TSGLI hasn't allowed for that loss at this point in time," Sackett said. But, the U.S. Department of Veterans Affairs is working to include other types of injuries, including PTSD, under TSGLI program coverage, he said.

Yet, military veterans who suffer from combat-zone-related PTSD may be eligible for financial aid under the Combat-Related Special Compensation program, which became effective June 1, 2003, said Sackett, who is chief of the CRSC and TSGLI divisions at U.S. Army Human Resources Command.

The CRSC program provides compensation for eligible retired veterans with combat-related injuries who have 20 years of military service and have received a U.S. Department of Veterans Affairs disability rating of 10 to 100 percent, Sackett said.

Beach blast celebrates

Kwajalein toasts America's

Hourglass reports

At 8:30 a.m. on Wednesday morning, a handful of athletes met under the tent at Emon Beach. While they were discussing the rules of the 4th of July volleyball tournament that would begin at 9 a.m., workers from Community Activities were setting up tables and chairs, stapling bunting to a stage, connecting loud speakers and all sorts of electronic gadgets that would later turn the beach area into a festival of sound and sights.

Kwaj — American Style, was the theme for this year's Independence Day celebration. With the variety of red, white and blue festooned people tossing eggs, splashing, jumping and just hanging out, it could have been the 4th of July in Anywhere, USA. But it was on Kwajalein, Republic of the Marshall Islands.

sporting an American flag on his arm, gave the official speech that started the day's activities. The colonel spoke of the statement "freedom isn't free" and where it came from. It is from a poem by the son of a U.S. Marine pilot who served in Vietnam, Kelly Strong. Strong is now a pilot in the U.S. Coast Guard.

As is a tradition on Kwajalein, the Independence Day beach activities began with a parade of decorated bikes. Young people rode past the viewing stands on their bikes with fluttering streamers, spinning, patriotic whirly-gigs; some even wore red, white and blue hats and sunglasses.

Amber Banducci, home from college in Colorado, sang the National Anthem. Rich Feagler spun tunes throughout the day.

championship game at approximately 1:45 p.m. Brandon's team defeated Kool Beans. In Baggo competition, Doug Vanderveen and Jason Heider won the best of three series over Phil Corbin and Floyd Corder III.

"We had several rounds and winners for the family fun frenzy and bingo," Kim Parker, supervisor of Entertainment Services, who headed up the team that presented most of the activities, said.

Also at the beach were special retail items denoting the holiday and food for purchase as well as a tent where local vendors plied their wares.

Parker, and the people responsible for tables, tents and special events, have been working almost non-stop for the last few weeks with the numerous Armed Forces Entertainment productions visiting the islands as well as the end of school year activities.

Parker, ready to slow down and take a breath, offered big thanks to the people who support these events.

She said the women from the Hobby Shop volunteered to decorate the stages for both the AFE Polynesian Review last week as well as the 4th of July activities. She added that the assistance provided by the Marine Department and Heavy Equipment Shop helped make this year's Independence Day celebration a success.

The day's activities ended with a fireworks show in the lagoon. Accompanied by music, the fireworks lit up the night sky.
