Bone, shell fragments among WWII finds

Drainage work unearths artifacts from apparent Japanese structure

Story and photos by Peter Rejcek

While Kwajalein was busy celebrating Marshallese culture last week, a different part of the island's history was being unearthed behind the Yokwe Yuk Club.

A drainage project to alleviate flooding problems behind the club spilled forth an unexpected treasure of World War II artifacts, including human bone fragments, an unknown structure and ammunition.

"What we have here is soil that hasn't been disturbed since the end of World War II. Therefore, the whole area is part of the national historic battlefield site and needs to be protected," said Dr. Boris Deunert, the archaeologist overseeing the ar-

Fire Prevention Week to feature poster contest

By Peter Rejcek

Safety is one of the watch words on Kwajalein, but next week the spotlight burns a little brighter on one area — fire safety.

Oct. 3-9 is national Fire Prevention Week, and the USAKA Fire Department will observe the 74-year-old safety campaign with a host of activities, including a poster contest for kids and a fire station open house.

"It's something every fire department does every year," said Heather Horner, USAKA fire inspector, of the week-long observance.

This year is the second of a three-year program by the National Fire Protection Association (NFPA) focusing on fire escape routes. The theme, "The Great Escape," encourages families, particularly children, to design escape plans and practice them.

"Most people underestimate fire's power and speed," Horner explained. "In the best case, you only have just one or two minutes to escape a typical home fire safely. Home fire escape planning and practice are critical to life safety because they ensure that everyone knows how to use those minutes wisely and escape unharmed."

To drill that lesson to the public, the USAKA fire department will hold a variety of activities, including:

- School tours of the fire station throughout the week. Horner said students will talk to firefighters, enjoy demonstrations and even see a firefighter in full gear.

- A local fire drill poster contest for kids in first through sixth grades. Posters will be collected from schools on Oct. 5 and awards for the top five in each class presented at George Seitz Elementary School on Oct. 9.

"Basically, it's the same thing as last year," Horner said, referring to last year's poster contest when students drew fire escape plans for their homes. This year, however, students will be encouraged to work on the projects at home rather than in art class.

"It will be more of a family project," Horner said. "We want them to come up with escape plans, but we want them to practice them, too."

chaeological assessment of the site as part of the digging permit process.

“While we were excavating it we found unexpended ammunition, a Japanese rice bowl, various body parts – I mean skeletal remains, [finger bones] and skull fragments,” he added. “We knew that this area had pretty much been undisturbed since World War II.”

Also among the finds: a button possibly belonging to a Japanese officer’s uniform, based on the expensive material; a Kirin beer bottle, about twice as thick as modern bottles; and several rusted canisters peeled back like bananas. The canisters were found sitting on top of a crate, which was discovered on the roof of the unknown structure.

The site, located on a raised area of ground southwest of the Surf BQ and to the rear of the Yokwe Yuk, was being excavated for use as a stormwater detention pond to mitigate part of the flooding problem. The main part of the project is a pair of 12-inch drain lines starting at Lagoon Road and running behind the Yokwe Yuk Club.

“With projects like this, you never know what you’re going to come across,” Deunert noted.

Besides the World War II artifacts, diggers also uncovered an earthen Marshallese oven called an um along the route of the ditch near Lagoon Road.

“We found an earth oven, the same kind they’re building at the Marshallese Cultural Center right now,” said Deunert, referring to the Mani Day observance activities on Saturday. “We found one that dates back to the Japanese occupation.”

Also along the path of the ditch were the foundation slabs of three concrete warehouses. Judging by the materials used, such as the smooth rebar and coral aggregate, Deunert said the buildings are Japanese. After cataloging the find, crews were forced to slice off the top layers of the foundation slabs to make the ditch deep enough for the drainage lines.

“The problem we have with the Japanese is that they build pretty good structures, that’s why they’re still here,” Deunert said. “They had a lot of structural steel in there, which is a problem when you want to keep the structure intact.”

According to Deunert, every effort is made to leave such structures intact through a policy he calls “protection through avoidance.”

“If we can avoid the structure, we avoid it. We just change the plans,” he said.

Concerning the site where the World War II remains were found, the normal procedure is to make an assessment and determine if it’s an intact burial. In this case, obviously, procedure is blown a little off course.

“It’s not even a burial,” Deunert said. “In fact, that person or people were blown to pieces.”

The Oakland-based archaeologist said he believed the remains were likely Asian, based on the size of the bones found. He said the person or people could have been Japanese, or even a Korean slave laborer.

After halting the excavation, Deunert notified the provost marshal and the hospital about the find, since it included human remains. The Republic of the Marshall Islands

Dr. Boris Deunert holds two pieces of bone fragment against his own fingers to illustrate the size of the deceased person’s hand.

(RMI) EPA and RMI Historic Preservation office were also notified, and responded by asking that construction be halted. The three-foot deep hole was to be refilled this week after workers finished sifting through the dirt already moved for further remains.

Harry Bryson, senior environmental engineer for USAKA, said the mitigation will be completed this week, and the drainage lines will also soon be finished.

“That detention pond is not going to happen in the foreseeable future,” he said. “The original part [of the drainage project] is pretty well complete. The installation of the storm sewer lines is going on as planned.”

Bryson said such finds as the one uncovered last week are not too common, though some areas, such as a section of island between Fourth Street and the high school, do yield artifacts — such as Japanese mortars and grenades — on occasion.

While officials say the ideal solution would be to archaeologically examine the entire area, the funds for such a project are simply not available.

“It takes a substantial amount of cash,” Deunert said.

Officials: No easy solutions to 'reefwalkers'

By Peter Rejcek

Residents who discover one of two Marshallese men in their homes or on their property are encouraged to contact the Kwajalein Police Department.

Popularly referred to as "the reefwalkers" because they cross the reef from Ebeye, Little Bustard or Big Bustard to Kwajalein at low tide, Clemi Ajen and Juda Joel are reported to have repeatedly trespassed into residents' homes, generally looking for food, alcohol and money.

"Both of them are somewhat mentally challenged," explained Kwajalein Police Chief Terry Hardy. "Basically they come over for a couple of things: Ajen is looking mainly for petroleum products (which he sniffs), food and alcohol. Joel is interested most in food and money, although either will take money, or anything they can get their hands on. When they do come over [the reef], they'll shake on doors until they find something open."

The issue of the reefwalkers came to the public forefront during the most recent Kwaj Town Hall meeting when one resident reported a break-in at his home and wondered what could be done about the problem.

USAKA/KMR officials and police say their options are few because the men are Marshallese nationals and have not been charged with any crimes on Ebeye. Hardy said his department works with the Republic of the Marshall Islands police and the Kwajalein Atoll Local Government police in trying to resolve the matter.

"They assist us any way they can," he said. "I wish I knew a solution."

Local authorities have repeatedly tried to corral the duo, even going so far as to send Ajen to another atoll, according to Lt. Col. Steve Beal, chief of the USAKA/KMR Host Nation office. Beal noted an absence of facilities to deal with the mentally challenged in the RMI is one of several problems faced by officials in this situation.

Marshallese culture also plays a role: Because of the lack of facilities, the burden of care falls on the family, so that even jailed individuals must rely on relatives for such basics as food.

Beal said the problem has even been brought to the ambassador to the RMI president.

"We've brought it up in every forum," he said.

Police have documented 42 visits by Ajen since September 1997. Over the last nine years, Joel has crossed the reef at least 91 times, according to police records. Hardy said Marshallese authorities in Majuro are looking into the possibility of prosecuting Ajen in connection with the crimes alleged on Kwaj.

Residents have reported waking up in the middle of the night to find one of the two individuals in their home. While apparently nonviolent, Hardy said, "Some of the officers have had some problems."

"Fortunately, we've never had a major crisis," he added. "Just tell them you'll call the police and they will leave."

Hardy said officers will periodically patrol the north end of the island during low tide for the reefwalkers, who act separately. Both men, noted the chief, are very familiar with the reef and tides.

Police and USAKA/KMR officials say the best defense for residents is to simply keep their homes locked and to contact police immediately if they should come in contact with either individual.

"The days of not locking your doors are gone," Hardy said.

Ajen is described as a Marshallese national in his late 30s, with a heavyset frame. Joel is described as a Marshallese male in his late 20s, thinner, with a small frame and open sores on his body.

Fire Prevention Week commemorates 1871 Chicago fire

Prizes are gift certificates from Macy's West.

- A national fire drill poster contest for kids. Entry forms are available at the fire station, and must be returned by Oct. 19.

The nationwide winner will be announced Nov. 15 and will receive a trip to Walt Disney World for four people.

- Fire station open house for the public with refreshments and fire safety displays on Thursday, Oct. 7, from 6-8 p.m.

- A fire prevention community display Oct. 11 at the mini-mall from 9 a.m. to 12:30 p.m. There will be fire safety displays, as well as poster displays from the local contest winners.

Fire Prevention Week marks the anniversary of the Great Chicago Fire of Oct. 9, 1871, which claimed more than 250 lives and destroyed over 17,000 structures.

In 1911, a fire at New York's Triangle Shirtwaist factory claimed 145 lives.

To commemorate the 40th anniversary of the Chicago fire that year, the Fire Marshals Association of North America proclaimed the nation's first Fire Prevention Day to promote public awareness of fire safety.

Fourteen years later, President

Calvin Coolidge declared Fire Prevention Week an official national observance.

Horner said the USAKA Fire Department has recognized the safety campaign since at least 1985. While the observance targets children, she said families should practice fire escape plans at least every six months and should be aware of where fire extinguishers are located.

Fire extinguishers are available from Macy's West, and the fire department offers free classes on how to use them.

"They actually get to put out a fire," Horner said. "That gives them a little confidence using it."

Tradition! Texas chili wins Roi-Namur contest

Over $3,000 raised for Enniburr children

Story and photos by Peter Rejcek

Sporting names like "Mean Green Chili," "Incinerator Chili," "Spiritually Sound Chili" and "Texas Killer Chili," the 21 concoctions submitted to the Roi-Namur First Annual Chili Cook-off ranged from the traditional, red hot stew with a green chili floating ominously on top to a pale brew which resembled chicken and dumplings.

In the end, tradition — Texas tradition — prevailed.

"If there is a secret to my chili, it is no beans and lots of meat. It's a family recipe and a pretty traditional Texas recipe," said chili cook-off winner "Mama" Margaret Williams, Roi resident and Texas native.

Williams' Texas Killer Chili was the proverbial cream of the crop Sunday according to a long line of chili experts who courageously sampled every entry, risking numbed lips and scorched tongues. Coming in second was Darren Wilburn's Surf Shack Slurry, while Last Minute Favorite Chili by Karin Robas was the third favorite of judges. The winners received trophies, and plaques will be placed in the Outrigger Bar to immortalize the atoll's best chili cooks.

"It's good chili. There's definitely different flavors," said judge Cheri Malloy as she scanned over pan after pan of chili, spread over long tables like a greasy, chunky rainbow.

Scores of Kwajers joined their Roi cousins for the event, which included craft sales, a pie-throwing booth and probably Micronesia's only flush toilet dunking booth, where for a modest donation, carnival goers could spin a wheel for the chance to "flush" water over the unlucky occupant.

Crafts included seashell magnets and nightlights by Bruce Johnson, as well as Carol Saunders' herbal soaps, lotions and teas, among others.

"It's good. It's a good day for it," Saunders said of the festival.

The carnival will be really good for the children of Enniburr, or Third Island. Proceeds from the event will be used for the Enniburr Children's Christmas Fund. More than $3,000 was raised through T-shirt and koozies sales, booth rentals, chili sales and the two fund-raising booths, according to Laurie McGovern.

"The proceeds go into a fund that enables the Enniburr Children's Christmas Fund committee to buy toys and T-shirts for the kids on Third Island," she said.

In fact, for a chance to slam a pie into Von Christiansen's face, people dished out $360. Jan Christiansen alone paid $125 for the privilege to smear pie in her husband's face. Von Christiansen, outer islands logistics manager, generously allowed himself to be "auctioned" as a whip cream pie target five times.

The event, which organizers hope to repeat next year, proved so successful another Dash-7 flight was added Sunday evening to return Kwajers back home, besides the two additional flights already added that day.

"We just want to make sure that USAKA, the aviation department and the people that live on Kwaj know how much we appreciate their support to make this a wonderful event and a great day," Williams said. "Everyone was so generous and it will really show on Dec. 13 when we have the children's Christmas party up here."

Smoking Policy changes enacted at USAKA

USAKA changed its smoking policy (USAKA policy No. 600-3) in June to bring it into compliance with changes made in the smoking policies at the Department of Defense and Department of the Army level.

Promoting the health of soldiers, civilian employees, contractors, and their families is a USAKA goal. Creating smoke free workplaces and reducing exposure to secondhand smoke promotes good health.

The following are extracts of the

Commander's Corner

Col. Gary K. McMillen

USAKA policy:

- Smoking is prohibited in all workplaces within USAKA except the recreational areas that serve alcohol. Smoking is prohibited within 50 feet of any workplace entrance or exit, except the west entrance of Building 1010.

- Smoking is prohibited in all government ground vehicles and aircraft. Smoking is prohibited on landing craft while conducting ferry operations, but is permitted only on weather decks on other USAKA vessels and landing craft in other operations — provided the vessel master determines that such smoking does not endanger the safety of the vessel crew.

- Smoking is not allowed in common areas of all bachelor quarters.

Non-smoking accommodations will be made available to anyone that wants to live in a smoke-free environment, including smokers. Residents are held responsible for keeping non-smoking accommodations smoke free. So, if you need a smoke in the middle of the night and are not willing to get dressed and go 50 feet beyond the entrance to the BQ for your smoke, you should be living in a smoking BQ. If residents or their guests smoke in non-smoking accommodations, they will be reassigned to smoking accommodations and be held responsible for the cost of restoring the BQ to a smoke-free condition. Reassignment to available smoking quarters will be made at the first offense.

Violations of this policy should be reported to managers, supervisors and, if necessary, law enforcement personnel. Failure to comply with this policy can result in administrative actions up to and including barring from USAKA for serious and/or repeat offenses.

The period for adaptation to the changes in the smoking policy is completed. Compliance with the smoking policy in all areas is expected.

PTO program offers choices from pet care to space probe rescue

By Barbara Johnson

With subjects as diverse as theatre, Spanish, running, solar system rescue and hair-braiding, there seems to be something for everyone in the new George Seitz Elementary School PTO Enrichment Program.

In response to a flyer sent to the community earlier this month, adults and high school students came forward to share their special skills and interests with elementary school students after school or on the weekend.

The program, which begins in early October, is designed to provide enrichment for students, but it also will serve as a fundraiser for the PTO. Money taken in after expenses will be added to PTO funds for school programs and activities during the year.

"We wanted to tap the whole community for this program, including people who weren't already involved in the school as parents," Heidi L'Esperance, Enrichment Committee chairperson, explained.

Classes begin as early as Oct. 7, and the last session will be held Nov. 20. A fee of $5 per student covers attendance at one, several or all classes. They will be filled on a first-come, first-served basis. A catalog was sent home with all elementary students this week describing the programs offered and containing a sign-up sheet to be returned to L'Esperance.

The nine classes offered this fall vary in number of sessions, times and locations. They are: Theatre/Drama — performing in a play; Fire Prevention — learning to use a fire extinguisher and put out a real fire; The Great Solar System Rescue — a simulated rescue of space probes; Pet Care; Beginning Spanish; Running Club; Hair-Braiding; Photo Album and Holiday Craft — creating a Christmas T-shirt.

L'Esperance said she regrets there were no Marshallese culture classes offered.

"I was disappointed about that," she said. "We're still looking for someone to contribute that piece to the program."

One class, The Great Solar System Rescue, involves a computer interactive program that simulates rescue of space probes from the solar system. In this two-day course, taught by elementary school teacher Madelain Westermann, the goal is to save the Earth by recovering five lost space probes while spending the least amount of taxpayer money possible.

"This tests their decision-making and cooperation skills. They have to come to a consensus and use negotiation," Westermann said.

The payoff is, if they succeed, they save the Earth and taxpayer money. On the other hand, if they fail, they spend billions of dollars and don't save the Earth.

An open house Dec. 2 will be a culmination of the fall enrichment session and give the children a chance to show off their creations or demonstrate skills. The evening will begin with a performance by the Theatre/Drama class of the play, "Who's in Rabbit's House."

Volunteer teachers are still needed for the next session, which begins in February. Some suggested subjects are a chess tournament, oceanography, math club, time management, photography, Valentine-making, and Marshallese crafts and language. Volunteer aides are also needed.

For more information about the program or to sign up to volunteer, call L'Esperance at 52423.

The fish were biting last weekend when the crew of the Misty Ann brought in one 100-pound and two 40-pound yellow fin tuna. Who caught the big one? "It was a team effort," said boat captain Mike Maurer. "Everyone had their turn reeling in the fish." Crew are, from left, John Comeau, Jeff Chaney, Maurer, Maj. Gen. Willie Nance, Lt. Col. Johnnie Bone and Buck Blackwell.

Range mission puts missile defense to test Sunday

Barring a mission slip, National Missile Defense team and Kwajalein Missile Range will conduct Integrated Flight Test-3 at 2 p.m. Sunday.

In conjunction with the operation, caution and hazard areas have been set aside within the mid-atoll corridor of Kwajalein Atoll, as well as external to the atoll.

See Tuesday's paper for specific caution zones and times, as well as mission slip alternate dates.

Residents may view the operation from Kwaj in the northern skies and from Roi-Namur in the southern skies.

Questions regarding the safety requirements for this mission should be directed to Command Safety office, range safety officer, at 54250.
