Teaming up for education

The Kwajalein School District's 46 teachers gather for a photo Wednesday while preparing for the 1999-2000 school year, which starts for students Tuesday. The teaching staff includes 13 new members (each profiled on pages 2-4). The district also offers a new schedule for high school students and a number of new classes (see story on page 5). So kids, enjoy this weekend as if it's your last without homework for awhile, because it could be. (Photo by Jim Bennett)

Dewaruci makes delightful visit

A pair of bare-footed Indonesian sailors lock brown, wiry arms together on the deck of the KRI Dewaruci in a spontaneous game of pancho, or arm wrestling.

The two men grunt, muscles bulging with effort, looking like a couple of crabs in battle as they squat on the wooden planks of the 58-meter long ship. As suddenly as it began, the match ends in a stalemate, both men smiling brilliant white grins.

Those toothy smiles became commonplace on Kwajalein this past week as the Indonesian Navy Training Ship returned to the island en route to Port Moresby, Papua New Guinea. Much like the first trip in May, a host of activities and exchanges of good will took place between Kwaj residents and their unique visitors.

Some residents apparently enjoyed the visit so much they even considered running away and joining the Indonesian Navy.

Five-year-old Luke Wilcox, surrounded by a table of energetic, gesturing cadets in uniform during Monday's Emon Beach party, said he wanted to become a sailor because "they have swords."

Patrick Riordan, top, follows an Indonesian cadet down from the foremast during a tour of the ship from top to deck Monday.

Kwajalein Schools recruit world of experience in new teachers

By Peter Rejcek and Jim Bennett

Thirteen new teachers will bring to Kwajalein classrooms experience and backgrounds from all over the United States and world, for that matter, this school year.

Many were hired through job fairs, word-of-mouth, and to a great degree, the World Wide Web.

Like high school journalism teacher Mike Riley, who was looking for an international job when he clicked his mouse on Kwaj.

The rest, as more than one new colleague noted, is history.

"I'm kind of surprised we all don't live in huts with the breeze blowing through," Riley, 49, said when asked about his initial reaction to the island lifestyle. "There are some incredible, interesting people on this island, and I want my students to write about them."

A native of Montana, Riley has spent much of his teaching career in Cody, Wyo., where he taught newspaper and yearbook, winning numerous awards along the way.

He said he wants to bring that commitment of excellence to Kwaj's school publications.

"I'm looking forward to trying to build a high school newspaper that truly is the students' voice and that's available to the whole island," he said. "I truly believe the success of a student newspaper depends on student ownership.

"It's an avenue for student writing," added Riley, whose career in law was cut short by his first teaching job — in a Montana prison.

"I guess I thought I could do more good in the world by teaching writing, than by being a lawyer," Riley mused.

His wife Theo Riley, who will divide her time between being a school psychologist and working in Raytheon's employee assistance program, joins Riley on Kwaj.

A former English teacher and guidance counselor, Theo Riley got her doctorate from Montana State University. Riley said she prefers the classroom setting to the hospital, where she worked for 11 years in Cody.

"Since I've been in educational settings, I enjoy the energy in the classroom. Educational settings to me are very hopeful places to work," she said. "I was ready to change."

As far as her initial impression of Kwaj, Theo Riley said, "I love the warm weather ... I like being surrounded by the ocean."

The Rileys are not the only wife-husband team to join the school system this year. Josh and Marianne Trandall of South Dakota, married three weeks ago, come to Kwaj hoping to save a little money and experience a different kind of lifestyle.

Josh Trandall also said the warmer weather would be a welcome change to South Dakota winters.

"It's a good chance to save more money than where we were at," Josh Trandall said of the couple's move. "Just a different experience.

Also a chance to work with different kids."

Marianne Trandall will teach eighth and tenth grade English. A graduate of Blackhill State University, this will be her second year to teach school. She said teaching was a tradition in her family.

"It was teaching or nothing," she joked.

Josh Trandall graduated with his master's degree from Northern State University, and will teach physical education at the elementary school.

So, why teaching as a profession? "My parents weren't teaching, so I thought I'd try something different,"

he said. "I enjoy teaching."

Besides work, Josh Trandall said he plans to enjoy the recreational activities offered at Kwaj.

"I want to try scuba diving," he said. "I like sporting activities — softball, snorkeling, those sorts of things."

As for Marianne, "I plan to watch him do all these things."

So far, the couple said they are most impressed with the resources provided by Kwaj schools.

"It's nice. They have lots of stuff. Books beyond your wildest imagination," Marianne Trandall said. "I never saw so many copies. Usually you have to run off copies."

Also among the school's newlyweds is kindergarten teacher Kathleen Wilcox.

Wilcox, of Conway, Ark., joins her husband Joe Bruce Wilcox, a mechanic with the Utility Department, after their wedding July 24.

Kathleen Wilcox

She taught for 11 years previously, the past seven at Mt. Vernon-Enola Consolidated School District near Conway.

"Everyone has been very friendly here," she said. "It's going to be great."

Lisa Lamon, who will teach second grade, gave Kwaj high marks for its plethora of teaching materials in contrast to schools stateside.

"The supplies that are available to us, the money available to us, compared to public education, is so much more," she noted.

Lisa Lamon

"We really had a hard time back home," said the second grade teacher from Athens, Ala. "Here you just open up the closet and they have all kinds of stuff for you to use to teach your lessons."

Unlike her other colleagues, who are all new to Kwaj, Lamon has been here since last year, when she moved to the island with her husband, Jack, who works for Boeing.

"It's not home, but I like it," Lamon said of her Kwaj experience.

This will be Lamon's ninth year to teach school. She received her undergraduate degree from Athens State University, and her master's degree from Alabama A&M. Lamon said she is eager to return to the classroom.

"I got bored staying at home," she said. "I was going crazy. You can only go to the beach so many times."

Another Internet hire, Jeff Oberlin, 32, said he became a teacher because of his desire to work with children.

"I love kids. I love working with kids," said Oberlin, a Penn State University graduate. "I would do it for free if I could."

Jeff Oberlin

An instructor in North Carolina since 1992, Oberlin will teach eighth and ninth grade world history, as well as coach soccer. He said the thought of living next to the beach attracted him to Kwaj.

"The island lifestyle [attracted me]," he said. "I never lived near a beach. I always wanted to be near a beach. I'm definitely near a beach now."

So, is Kwaj all he hoped it would be?

"I love it," Oberlin said. "These are some of the nicest people I've ever met in my entire life. If you don't feel welcome here it's your own fault."

When not teaching, Oberlin said he hopes to take advantage of the many recreational sports here, particularly those involving aquatics, such as scuba diving.

"I want to be in the water as much as possible — and on the soccer field," he said. "Soccer is one of my passions."

While sports also play a big part in Cris Laytham's life, the new school librarian said he has plans to tour as much of the Pacific area as possible while living on Kwaj.

Cris Laytham

"I'd like to see some of the other islands in the area," he said. "The wife and I decided we wanted to move overseas."

The 27-year-old educator, who also taught social studies in a Kansas City suburb for several years, said he is enjoying the island lifestyle.

"I like it. You can't beat the view," Laytham noted. "I think it's going to take a while to adjust to the slower pace."

"The people have been great since we've been here," he added.

Laytham, who has been in education for about six years, said he joined the profession for several reasons.

"My own interest in continuing my own learning, was one of the big reasons," said Laytham, adding he was also inspired to teach by former instructors and for his love of athletics.

Like many people new to Kwaj, Laytham said he plans to enjoy water sports and the plethora of other leisure activities available here.

"It amazes me the amount and variety of recreation activities there are," he said.

Mike Barron, who will teach chemistry, biology and life sciences, said he hopes to involve himself heavily in the community while on Kwaj.

"I'm very impressed with the community, with the services available,"

Travel and international flavor attracts new Kwaj teachers . . .

he said.

Something of a world traveler, Barron has taught in Turkey, Korea, Bolivia and Saudi Arabia as part of the International Baccalaureate program over the last decade. When the program was discontinued, Barron found a way to continue globetrotting when he discovered Kwaj on the Internet.

"I was just hired by e-mail," he said. "I'm a teacher. I'm not rich. If I want to see the world, this is it."

Barron did his undergraduate work at the University of Texas at Austin, and followed that with graduate studies at the University of Houston.

The 50-year-old science teacher said he hopes to build a strong program while on Kwaj, and like other colleagues, said he is encouraged by the resources on the island, even for things outside the realm of education.

"Pretty much anything you need is available here on the island," he said after his first week here.

While Kwaj is only her second international assignment, Sandra Cowan said the chance to travel and teach computer classes enticed her to take an assignment on Kwaj. She came to the island after a two-year stint in Mexico City.

"I really liked it there. I traveled all over the place. I didn't save any money, so that's why I'm here," she said. "Plus, they gave me the opportunity I was looking for — teaching computers at high school."

Mike Barron

Sandra Cowan

Cowan, 29, will teach basic computers, programming and geometry at the high school, as well as a seventh grade math class.

A graduate of Northeast Missouri State University (now Truman State University), Cowan said she had always wanted to be a teacher, especially a mathematics teacher.

"I love the kids," she said. "I like the more challenging material. I feel more needed when it's more challenging."

As far as her experience on Kwaj, Cowan said, "It's paradise. It's absolute paradise. Not only is it beautiful, everyone has been really nice."

Also coming to Kwaj via Mexico is Tim Merkel.

Merkel, originally of Rochester, N.Y., will teach seventh grade social studies, eleventh and twelfth grade sociology and psychology and also serve as Community Education director.

He previously taught social studies in Guadalajara, Mexico, and Pachuca, Mexico, which is north of Mexico City.

"I wanted to see more places in the world and explore different cultures," Merkel said of his decision to come to Kwaj. "As a social studies teacher, that's pretty important."

Judy Ryan came to Kwajalein for the international experience, as well. Teaching primarily English as a Second Language to elementary students, with some art classes as well, Ryan will work heavily with the Marshallese students who come to Kwajalein schools. It's a challenge

Tim Merkel

she looks forward to.

"It's very different on Kwaj," she said. "In Brazil, I was at an international school with 40 different nationalities."

Ryan spoke Portuguese in Brazil and has already made plans to learn Marshallese. She also plans to enjoy island life.

"I always wanted to live on an island," she said.

New sixth grade teachers Barbara Terry and Kathy Dorr have already enjoyed island life and look forward to enjoying teaching.

Terry, who moved to Kwajalein eight months ago, taught English at the high school during the second semester along with algebra II and trigonometry at College of the Marshall Islands.

"I love to stay busy, and I love the island. I love the culture," she said.

Originally from the Bay Area, Terry previously taught fifth and sixth graders in a stateside classroom with 38 students. She will have 17 this year.

"I'm looking forward to the smaller classes," she said.

Dorr agreed the smaller classes will help.

Coming to Kwaj in March from Sebring, Fla., Dorr substituted last school year, finding the school system unique.

"Kwaj in a lot of ways, is private-public school. It's run much like a private school, with a lot of the benefits of a public school," she added.

New courses, schedule to greet Kwajalein students in 1999-2000

Advanced computer classes ... Spanish ... ceramics ... the variety and number of classes offered at Kwajalein Junior/Senior High School appears to match any curriculum set by a similar sized school back in the United States.

And those are just the new classes offered this year.

"There's a lot happening at the high school," said school Principal Stephen Howell. "We've added some new classes this year."

More than 200 junior high and high school students, along with 287 elementary children, are expected to walk through classroom hallways beginning Aug. 24. Older children will be greeted with a host of new classes, as well as several other changes.

The most notable change will be a switch from an eight-period schedule to seven classes. The day will also be 45 minutes shorter, with classes beginning at 8 a.m. and finishing at 3 p.m.

Howell said the decision to go to a shorter schedule involved the entire community.

"We've cleared that barrier," he said, adding the schools can now focus on other topics, such as methods of instruction and curriculum.

For example, a consultant was on Kwajalein this week to teach instructors "differentiating instruction," according to Karen Ammann, superintendent of schools. She explained the training shows teachers how to teach multiple levels of kids in the same classroom.

Students, however, will probably be more interested to learn about some of the new classes that will be offered this year.

Among the new offerings are: an advanced computer class; a computer program "C" class; an electronics class; seventh grade reading (for students not in the band); eighth grade reading (nine-week program); eighth grade wood class (for non-band students); a seventh grade Spanish class (nine-week cycle) that's been gone for a year; a French V class; and an eighth grade art class.

Those with a passion for the media will have the opportunity this year to take journalism for both semesters.

"We want to start publicizing more things about the school in the community," Howell explained.

For students who fancy photo-journalism, a second-semester photography class will be available. The arts will also enjoy a boost with a ceramics class.

A couple of other changes in the curriculum are also planned.

Health education will be taken out of the physical education curriculum and put into the academic schedule. The seventh and eighth grade students will alternate days in class throughout the year — increasing the time for health education from six weeks to 18 weeks.

"In the world in which we live today ... we need to provide a little bit better education for our kids," Howell explained.

Also, the number of study halls is being reduced from 10 to 6½ this year, with students being encouraged to take more challenging classes.

"All the study halls are very small this year," Howell said. "Ideally, we'd like to cut that down to where we have none in the next year or two."

There are also plans to strengthen the school's vocational curriculum, which provides part-time jobs for 11th and 12th grade students. Work-studies include everything from the high-tech world of IMD to jobs at the small boat marina.

"We pretty much spread them around the island," Howell said. "We provide a good education for those kids."

School officials boasted the Kwaj school curriculum rivals others found in any small stateside community.

"We teach a typical American school curriculum," Ammann said. "Our kids score well above the national average on their college entrance exams ... I think this is a far more personal education."

Ammann also noted parental involvement is much higher on Kwajalein compared to CONUS communities, estimating 85 percent of teacher-parent conferences are attended at the junior/high school level, with nearly 100 percent involvement by those with younger children.

That commitment to the children's education appears to work both ways.

"We're really looking forward to it," Ammann said about the start of school.

Adopt-A-Cadet gives Indonesian sailors a Kwajalein home

Rasyid Al Hafiz's favorite singers are Celine Dion and Shania Twain. The last good movie he saw was Lake Placid. He enjoys a good steak, but he's watching his fat intake, to keep in shape. His girlfriend misses him while he is away at sea.

Sounds like any normal navy academy cadet. Talking to him, one would hardly know he was from the Indonesian Naval Academy in Surabaya, Indonesia, and assigned to the four-month voyage of the academy's training vessel, KRI Dewaruci. On the other hand, he wears a sharp, crisply ironed khaki uniform with bright red trim and brass and gold insignia to represent his school and country.

Al Hafiz was one of 77 cadets aboard the Dewaruci, all of whom shared stories of their homes, careers, aspirations, and culture at home-cooked meals with Kwajalein families Tuesday night, as part of the Adopt-A-Cadet for Dinner program.

"We wanted to show them our appreciation for their last visit in May," said Maj. Steve Morris, USAKA assistant chief of staff. "And we thought what better way than to share dinner and an evening."

The community responded. More than 24 families or groups of families called, booking the 77 cadets for dinner. More families called, but the visiting ship had no more cadets to give, Morris said.

Preston and Pat Lockridge and their neighbors, for example, hosted

The Fullencamp family, with wife Trivina, who is Indonesian, hosted 15 cadets, three of whom came from her home town of Malang.

"It was especially great for her," husband Leo said. "She's been able to speak her language for the past three days."

"It was hard to believe the first time they came here," she said. "I didn't know any of them, but when you're from the same home town, you're kind of like brother and sister."

Al Hafiz and his academy roommate Laode Holib visited the home of Richard and Nina Dixon.

Both cadets enjoyed the crab dip appetizer, and after a short trip across the language barrier — discussing pink versus bloody, dark and light, and hard versus soft — determined they liked their steaks cooked "medium."

"Sizzler is a very popular restaurant in Indonesia," Al Hafiz added. "We have a lot of beef."

"We have a garden at home," remarked Holib, adding his family grows corn, among other vegetables.

Morris, whose family also joined the meal, gave the two cadets a quick lesson on how to stuff a baked potato with all the fixin's. The young sailors picked up the skills quickly and promptly devoured the results.

Meanwhile, the cadets shared talk of their country and culture.

On movies: "What might show in the summer in the United States, we would get a few months later," Al Hafiz said. On music: "Mariah Carey and Shania Twain are very popular," he said. A CD runs 50,000 rupies, or about $8. On food: rice and chicken are the most popular dishes, but beef ranks highly, too. They don't eat pork, nor drink alcohol.

And like American cadets, they have similar aspirations. Al Hafiz hopes to serve aboard a submarine. Holib wants to be assigned to a frigate-class warship.

The two, however, will have to complete examinations this fall at the academy, then survive a rigorous year-long training program for new ensigns before they receive their first postings.

Their current posting, aboard the Dewaruci, however, has given them

KRI Dewaruci return sparks beach bash ...

Exulted Dewaruci cadet Anis Latief, "He wants to be like me."

Most folks, however, were content with just visiting the 16-sail Barquentine ship Monday and Tuesday during an open house at Echo Pier.

"It's amazing. It's magnificent," said Janice Riordan, who was visiting the Dewaruci for the first time Monday morning with husband Jack and 13-year-old son Patrick.

"We got a personal tour," added Jack Riordan, who said his family would host two crew members Tuesday night for the Adopt-A-Cadet dinner.

There was certainly plenty on board the Dewaruci to amaze and delight visitors. From the intricate, wood carved posts from Papua New Guinea adorning either side of the control room to the tiny bazaar on deck offering such Indonesian wares as a sickle-shaped knife, the 46-year-old ship seemed like something out of a Hollywood movie or the mists of Indonesian myth.

In fact, for the mythology enthusiast, a trip into the Dewaruci state room offered a sight of both elegance and mystery. Besides the brass and glass plaques one might expect to find on any ship, dark wood figures from Hindu myth were scattered throughout the room, like guardians of an ancient past. Carved wood tables topped with glass retold the story of Dewaruci, the god of truth and courage, with a menagerie of characters, such as a winged figure.

"I thought the ornately carved tables from Bali were quite impressive and the other unique artifacts in the room tell an interesting story about the ship's history," said Kwaj resident Andrea Dixon during her tour of the Dewaruci.

Interestingly enough, despite the differences of culture, some of the cadets saw similarities between Kwaj and their homeland.

"I think the island is the same as Indonesia," cadet Widyo Sasonko said. Added cadet Nopriadi while talking to Roi-Namur resident Michelle Lanier, "The people here are really nice ... It's like a small Indonesian village."

Certainly both cultures enjoy to party, as one of the biggest bashes of the year took place at Emon Beach on Monday. Festivities included volleyball, music and swimming. A seven-piece brass band from the Dewaruci took to the stage — or basketball court, in this case — and played traditional music while their compatriots line danced with children.

A potluck dinner, followed by a performance by Latitude 8, capped off the evening.

"Everything went very smooth," said Steve Snider, superintendent of entertainment services. "From speaking with several old-timers, who have been on island for years, they felt it was one of the best turnouts ever for an event."

Snider estimated as many as 900 valuable experience as well as great memories of the longest voyage taken on by an Indonesian cadet crew since 1951. During the voyage they won the Gold Rush tall-ship race in California, and visited ports of call in Honolulu, San Francisco, San Diego, Long Beach, and Kwajalein.

"We were well received everywhere," Al Hafiz said. "But Kwaj is a very familiar place."

The evening quickly wound down and the cadets left early to make their ship by the 9 p.m. curfew.

"I hope to visit your country, but by the time I get there, you'll probably both be lieutenant commanders," Morris joked.

"Please keep in touch and let us know how you are doing in the future," Nina Dixon asked the young men.

They smiled, responded they would, gave a quick hug, and stole out into the night carrying their doggy bag of extra steaks, bread, and souvenir shells. The shells could some day adorn the office of an Indonesian commander. And the food... well, young men on a ship can always use a snack.

people came out for the Emon Beach party, bringing with them an array of dishes, desserts and pupus.

"We were concerned there would not be enough food," Snider said. But not to worry: "The cadets came back for seconds."

A lot of effort went into planning the party, which was unique in that less than a week of preparation went into its execution, according to Snider. From the electricians who set up equipment for the bands to the folks at the 10-10 store and the bakery who helped keep the foodstuff flowing, just about everybody got involved.

"This was an islandwide effort. It would not have happened without everyone showing up, bringing food," Snider said. "It just shows what Kwaj is capable of as a community."

Range operation scheduled for tonight

From staff reports

Barring a mission slip, a range operation scheduled for 8:46 p.m. should light up the skies tonight.

The operation, conducted in conjunction with National Missile Defense program, involves an Air Force Minuteman III missile and "radar credible targets" or decoys.

See Tuesday's Hourglass for caution zones and times.

Residents may view the operation from Kwaj in the northern skies and from Roi-Namur in the southern skies.

Kwaj residents are asked to observe a blackout in effect north of Bunker Hill.

For those residents wishing to capture the mission on film, here's a few tips:

- Do not use a flash.
- Use a camera with a manual settings and a weighted tripod.
- Set the speed at 100 with the F-stop at 8, and point the camera north, toward Ebeye (south if on Roi-Namur).
- Focus on infinity.
- Use a cable release and fire when the first RV comes into the camera's view. Keep the lens open until all the RVs have passed.
