U.S. Army Kwajalein Atoll, Republic of the Marshall Islands

Holocaust to be remembered at island luncheon

By Jim Bennett and Peter Rejcek

Kwajalein residents will gather Friday to remember victims of the Holocaust, in hopes such a thing never happens again.

Friday's Days of Remembrance luncheon at the Yokwe Yuk Club, sponsored by the Special Emphasis Equal Opportunity Program, will feature a guest speaker and special menu.

Included on the menu are bagels and lox with cream cheese and capers, broiled breast of chicken, potato latkes, and apple fritters on vanilla pastry cream.

Tickets are $6.95. Reservations may be made by calling Michelle Kenney at 53513 by Tuesday.

The Holocaust — the systematic murder of Jews and other people, including Gypsies, political prisoners, and homosexuals, by Nazi Germany — claimed some 12 million lives, not including the millions of soldiers and civilians killed during the war. Most victims were exterminated by gas chambers or by firing squad, while others succumbed to the severe deprivations and diseases at the camps.

Of the 9.5 million Jews living in Europe before the war, an estimated 63 percent, or 6 million, were killed. In Poland alone, 3 million of that country's 3.3 million Jews were murdered — nine out of every 10 people.

Range ops take teamwork

Mission test and technical directors play vital role

By Jim Bennett

Sitting at the computer console on his first mission as a KMR test director two years ago, Lt. Col. Robert James learned that the incoming missile had fired off its reentry vehicles. Then, "the bus" exploded after a destruct command was issued, scattering debris in front of the incoming warheads. James, the mission technical director, and the range personnel had only minutes to piece through the debris, find the warheads, and collect the data for the mission.

Meanwhile the RVs sped toward the range at 6 kilometers per second.

"There was not a lot of breathing going on," James joked.

"No one panicked," he added seriously. "I was relying on the experience of all the people here. These people know their systems. No one panics. They just say, 'We'll reroute this or do that,' and it works. This was a nominal mission that might have gone awry."

James serves as the chief of the Range Test Division, until he PCSes from KMR next week. As chief, he leads three Army KMR test directors, also known as range control officers, who all work hand-in-hand with the range mission technical directors, civilian contractors who direct the missions.

"It takes a lot of key people to pull off what we do here," said Steve Hill, Plans and Operations engineering leader and a mission technical director.

True. A hundred to 200 people work directly on any given range operation, depending on the type of mission, and that doesn't count the support personnel who all contribute. But if the range personnel were a football team, the test director and mission technical director, together, would be the quarterback.

"Neither one of us could be effective without the other," Hill said. "While the KTD/MTD may be the quarterback, the real stars that make the big plays are the experienced test directors and operators at all the sensors throughout the range."

To understand the job of the KMR test director and mission technical director, one must first understand the organization of the range operation.

Most missions are scheduled 12 to 18 months in advance. At that time, a range test director learns the customer's requirements.

"And then I talk to the MTD who knows the sensors inside and out," James said.

"The assigned MTD begins to come up with how we'll gather that (information) for the customer, what assets we'll use, what our contingency plans will be," Hill said. "We plan it all out in advance to the greatest extent possible. If all goes well, the mission technical director has little to do on mission day."

Often, a typical Air Force missile-tracking mission will include what the range calls, "associated operations." That's when other agencies place experiments on board the missile.

"It's expensive to fire a missile, and if they are going to fire, say, five RVs, and there's what they call 'empty seats,' then others can pay to have their experiments ride along on the mission," James said.

Consequently, KMR technicians must gather the Air Force data, along with data from the other experiments. who makes the decision which mission Altair will support.

"That was a substantial issue with the Russians years ago, when they would know when we had a mission and try and get something past us," Hill said. "It's still something to consider every mission."

Two weeks out, the range begins simulations and other last-minute preparation work.

"The simulations can be more stressing than the actual mission," Hill said. "We practice all kinds of things going wrong."

By mission time, the range has seen most of what can go wrong on their end.

During the mission, the radars and sensors, with all their accompanying personnel around the atoll, collect data and feed the information to the KMR Mission Control Center as it comes in. At the KMCC, a group of 10 contractors and three to four Army personnel, along with the test director, man a wrap-around console that looks like a cross between NASA's mission control and the bridge of the starship Enterprise.

The technical director stands in the center of the crescent, "so that he can pace," James said.

The technical director also moves from station to station, consulting with controllers, each of whom monitors a specific aspect of the mission.

"We at KMCC are really just a second set of eyes," Hill said. "Ninety-nine percent of the time the folks at the sensors make the correct decisions and correct problems before we have the opportunity to see them. We can construct the best plan in the world, but it will never work without great execution on the part of the sensors."

In addition, there are eight to 10 people supporting the KMCC in a nearby computer room.

Above the KMCC, in enclosed booths, the KMR commander, USAKA/KMR commander, contractor site managers, and VIPs can observe the mission.

"That becomes a bit of a dance sometimes," James said. "But we've always had very satisfied customers."

Two months before the mission, the range gears up.

"We ask, 'What are nominal requirements? What equipment will be ready? What's needed?'" Hill said.

One contingency to consider is the loss of assets. Altair, for example, maintains a 15-minute readiness to monitor foreign space launches. If a country makes an unannounced launch during a KMR mission, Altair first tries to resolve the conflict and support both the KMR operation and the Space Command tasking. If the conflict can't be resolved, then the Altair test director, the MTD, and KTD make a recommendation as to how Altair should respond to the conflicting requirements and present it to the KMR commander and USAKA commander,

Not just another fish story

College student finds new species of fish at Kwaj

Story and photos by Barbara Johnson

When Brian Greene submerged into the ocean with his friend and dad about a year ago, he had no idea that particular dive would turn out to be one of a kind.

The University of Hawaii freshman, home for spring break, had already logged in some 2,000 dives at Kwaj, so he thought he knew what to expect.

But, as it turned out, this was the dive that fulfilled his lifelong goal — discovering a new fish.

“Ever since I was a little kid, it has always been my dream to find a new species of fish,” Greene said.

He and his dive buddies were diving at about 90 to 100 feet oceanside, between SAR pass and Kwaj.

“I saw the fish out of the corner of my eye, and I just knew it was something [different],” Greene said, recounting his experience recently.

“I saw four others, but I could only catch one.”

He took the fish home to his aquarium, took pictures of it, and looked in every fish book he could find. But the fish, similar to a fairy basslet, was not in any of the books.

Greene said the fish, a member of the genus Pseudanthias, is related to a grouper, but tends to swim above the reef and eat plankton.

These fish swim in groups, called aggregations, usually with a dominant male. Because the fish he caught was more colorful than the others in its group, with beautiful oranges and pinks, Greene believes it was the male.

“I’ve been back to the same location about 50 times,” he said, “but I never have seen it again.”

Greene’s next step was to take his pictures to Dr. John Randall, ichthyologist at the Bishop Museum in Honolulu, who confirmed that it was likely a new species.

Brian Greene found this fish, believed to be a new species, near Kwajalein. If it is a new species, it will be called Pseudanthias greenei, in his honor.

When Greene returned to Kwaj for the summer, he preserved the fish and took it back with him to the Bishop Museum, where it now is among a library of fishes in the ichthyology department, while it is being studied.

Randall is currently writing a paper describing five new anthius species, and when it is published, Greene’s fish will be named Pseudanthias greenei.

Greene said there are a number of ways to confirm that a fish is unique. Among them are observing its color, which varies by location, temperature, and age; measuring its body parts; X-raying and measuring its bone structure; and genetic testing.

Greene has lived at Kwaj since he was six months old. He started snorkeling at two, and was scuba-certified at 12. His family has always had aquariums.

After finishing his degree in marine biology, Greene hopes to continue with advanced degrees in ichthyology. His ideal job would be taking new fish specimens and describing them.

While the thrill of finding his first new fish may be hard to top, who knows how many more are out there waiting for him.

Brian Greene, a Kwaj kid of 18 years, now studies marine biology at the University of Hawaii. Greene realized a dream in finding what may be a new fish species. The fish is now under study at the university.

Meck Bravo Team forms to deal with hazardous materials

By Jim Bennett

Ten people on Meck trained with Environmental, Safety, and Health last month to learn how to clean up hazardous waste, becoming one of four "Bravo Teams" to be formed at USAKA/KMR.

Bravo Teams already exist on Roi-Namur and Kwajalein and a second team will be formed on Kwajalein later this month. The teams meet OSHA training standards for the treatment of hazardous materials.

"They're like volunteer fire departments," said Jack Martindale of Environmental, Safety, and Health.

In the event of an emergency spill or accident, the Meck Fire Department, Kwajalein Police Department, and Environmental Office would respond first, Martindale explained. The Bravo Team would assemble and assist where needed, particularly in clean-up operations.

"(The training) was very informative," said Kelly Furgeson, of Meck Operations, who is incident commander for the team. "The guys did a really good job picking it up."

The Meck team was drawn from members of various departments that handle hazardous materials. Each member completed three days of training that focused on identifying hazardous materials, understanding physical and health risks, knowing the ins and outs of proper personal protection equipment such as respirators and protective suits, and working within the incident command system, Martindale said.

To complete the mission, the unit maintains three teams within the team — de-contamination, entry, and backup. Members are cross-trained in all three.

As part of their training, the group participated in a pair of scenarios.

In the first simulated response, the team was tasked to clean up the spill of a 55-gallon drum of methyl ethyl ketone.

The team cordoned off the "hot zone" and donned respirators and rubber suits.

"Everyone got to suit up," Furgeson said.

"We were able to react and clean it up without any injuries or fatalities," he added.

In the second mock scenario, the group cleaned up paint that had been spilled in an enclosed area.

The first Bravo Team was established on Roi-Namur in 1998, and since then, they have successfully worked several incidents.

Soon after their initial training, the Roi HAZMAT team responded to a bulging drum of paint-related material. A safe response was accomplished by isolating the container in a safe area and cooling the container to relieve internal pressure. Afterward, the container was managed in a secure area until the chemical reactions had ceased.

On Oct. 29, 1999, supporting legs of a 5,000-gallon tank-trailer of MO-GAS collapsed on a barge enroute to Roi-Namur. Though no leak occurred, the Bravo Team there deployed in support. The fuel was transferred, and the tank-trailer was removed the next day.

Kwajalein has a clean-up team made up of workers at the landfill, but Martindale said Environmental hopes to expand the training to include others on island through the Bravo Team program.

In November 1999, the Kwajalein Bravo Team, in cooperation with the Fire, Police, Safety, and Environmental departments, safely responded to a similar pressurized drum that was bulging. In this incident, a remote opening device was placed over the pressurized container that relieved the internal pressure while workers were stationed at a safe distance.

Kwaj is short on day care for youngsters

From Child Development Center

There isn't enough day care on Kwajalein for small children, according to a recent survey conducted by the Kwajalein Child Development Center, formerly named KAPS. About half of the 25 respondents said they need day care for their children who are less than two-and-a-half years old.

Despite the need, KCDC supervisor, Trina Tiffany, said there is no room to accommodate little children at their current facility.

What KCDC can do to fill the gap is train people to care for children in their homes. KCDC is looking for people who are interested in becoming family child care providers. Army regulations require providers and their families to submit to a criminal history background check and home inspection. Once that's complete, an FCC provider must pass a free training course in CPR, first aid, child development, and child care.

"If you're running a child care business in your home more than 10 hours a week, you must be certified," said Tiffany.

Exceptions include people who care for children fewer than 10 hours a week and those who care for children in the children's home.

Even older children can be caught in the child care crunch. Whether you're running to Surfway for milk, or working all day at the office, the Army requires children on Kwajalein to be properly supervised.

That means any child younger than 9 years old must be supervised by either a parent, KCDC or school-age services, a certified child care provider, another responsible adult, or an authorized babysitter.

According to Army regulations, a babysitter must be at least 12 years old. Sitters between the ages of 12 and 17 cannot take care of children for more than 12 hours at a time.

Children between the ages of nine and 17 may be left home alone for periods of time based on their age and maturity. They must know what to do in an emergency, including how to implement a fire evacuation plan. Parents are responsible for making sure their children have an accessible point of contact when they're not available.

For more information about USAKA's home-alone policy or to find out more about becoming a family child care provider, call Trina Tiffany, 52158.

Range tests require training ...

"You might watch 10 missions from up there (in the VIP booth), and there might be problems in some of them, but you'd never notice any difference," James said. "It's not an emergency to (the controllers). That's how cool these guys are and how well they know their systems."

Much of that comes from training, and the same holds true for the directors.

Test directors are regular Army officers. They rely heavily on the technical expertise of the civilians, but act as the government representative in charge and make key mission-altering decisions, often in consultation with higher-ups through the chain-of-command. Before becoming a test director, the officer assists a test director on at least two missions, James said.

The technical director - a Raytheon engineer - must have a diverse background, because he or she has to talk to radar, telemetry, optics, and all kinds of personnel, including VIPs, Hill said. All five technical directors on the staff have missile-testing experience.

After being selected as a technical director, the person completes 12 to 18 months of training. During this training, he or she gains experience at each of the consoles, and after being certified as a technical director, continues to rotate among the KMCC console positions when not directing a mission.

Those years of experience are needed when an RV comes streaking toward the atoll at six kilometers per second.

from the Tape Escape

Double Jeopardy — Ashley Judd plays Libby Parsons, who discovers that the husband she's convicted of murdering staged his own "death" and framed her for the crime. Released on parole, she skips town to find him — and that puts parole officer Travis Lehman (Tommy Lee Jones) on her trail. Rated R.

Letters From a Killer — Racer Darnell (Patrick Swayze) killed time on Death Row by writing love letters to women on the outside. But when his letters are sent to the wrong girlfriends, one of his "lovers" wants him dead. After a surprise release from prison, Darnell finds himself at the center of a cat-and-mouse game with a brutal killer. Rated R.

The Bone Collector — He takes his victims' lives and leaves behind mysterious pieces of a bizarre puzzle. The only person who may be able to make sense of the serial killer's plan is Lincoln Rhyme (Denzel Washington), a one-time top homicide investigator. After a tragic accident changes his life, he teams up with Angelina Jolie, who bravely searches for the clues that help them solve the case. Rated R.

Random Hearts — Harrison Ford plays an Internal Affairs sergeant who becomes entangled with Kristin Scott Thomas, a high-powered congresswoman, when an airplane crash kills both their spouses. Rated R.

Stigmata — Frankie Paige (Patricia Arquette) is a free spirit with no cares and no faith in God. When she begins to suffer the stigmata — living wounds of the crucified Christ — and speak in an ancient Biblical tongue, she comes to the attention of the Vatican's top investigator, Father Kiernan. Meanwhile, a corrupt church official decides she must be silenced. Rated R.

Eyes Wide Shut — Tom Cruise plays Dr. William Harford, and Nicole Kidman is his wife in Stanley Kubrick's daring last film, in which the couple is plunged into a psychosexual journey, a haunting dreamscape, and a riveting tale of suspense. Rated R.

It was this big ...

Happy fishermen, from left, Lenny Hamamoto, Aniema Thromman, and Danny "Ahi Slayer" Maning, hold a 100-plus pound ahi yellowfin they caught March 30, a quarter-mile from the Shark Pit. The fish and fishermen fought for 10 minutes, before Maning brought the fish on board. Ahi usually run between 15 and 20 pounds, Maning said.

Men's divisions end exciting softball season

By Peter Rejcek

The boys of summer have finished another softball season, while the women await a final showdown this week.

Podunkers and Son of Bob squared off in the A Division, and SOB ran away with the title 7-5, 19-8.

In B Division, Criminals stole the show from Medicare in the World Series 5-4, 10-2. Guppies was ousted from the playoffs by Medicare, after all three teams finished 8-2. Criminals automatically advanced to the big game, thanks to a fortunate coin toss.

A split between Chapel and Brothers All during the C Division regular season was erased by Chapel's dominating performance in the World Series, 16-2, 15-10.

The D Division World Series was the only one to go to three games. After winning 7-5 in extra innings, Spartans I Men lost to Tolemour in the final two games, 13-6, 3-0.

Homeplate and 30 Something meet in the Women's Division World Series tonight and tomorrow.

KRC's Driftwood Classic 10K run set for Monday

From Kwajalein Running Club

The Kwajalein Running Club's 22nd annual Driftwood Classic 10K road race is scheduled for Monday.

No pre-registration is necessary. Individuals and teams of five to eight runners can participate. Sign-in is near Emon Beach main pavilion between 4:30 and 4:50 p.m. Race time is 5 p.m. A two-mile run for novices will start at 5:05 p.m.

Both courses start and end at Emon Beach, and will stick to paved roads. The 10K (6.2-mile) course is the same as the run portion of the Rustman Triathlon, May 1. It consists of three two-mile loops in the residential/commercial end of Kwaj. Course maps will be available at the starting line.

Team scores are determined by adding the first five finish times together, but each team member must run the entire course. Teams can be any combination of persons.

Butterflies are now a common sight at the Kwajalein Public Gardens.

Butterflies flutter to Kwajalein Public Gardens

On a trip to the Kwajalein Public Gardens, visitors can see more than just native flowers and trees. Insects are also there in abundance.

"It's amazing how the vegetation can change the environment," said Roxana González-Ball, garden botanist. During the past several months, work crews and volunteers have cleared away brush and added flowering plants to the gardens. Since then, González-Ball has noticed many more insects. "We find praying mantis and see black bumblebees — also dragonflies," González-Ball said.

She said the butterflies are especially abundant at 8:30 and 11 in the morning. They can be seen lighting on bright pink periwinkle or lemon yellow portulaca.

Kwaj residents have donated most of the new plants in the gardens, including a giant bird-of-paradise, which is the centerpiece of a new display.

In addition, the gardens is one of the few places on Kwaj to see a producing breadfruit tree. The trees were planted by the Yokwe Yuk Women's Club more than 20 years ago.

The gardens are not only a place to observe insects and plants. They are also working gardens, producing plants for Self Help and the downtown beautification project.
