Bargain hunters strike gold

This weekend marked a veiritable shopping frenzy as residents could hit the American Legion-sponsored flea market Sunday and another multi-family sale Monday at the CRC.

Normally, the Bennetts, that is mostly the wife, will be drawn to such events like a moth with wallet to flame, but this year we stood on the other side of the table, selling used stuff. After a recent move and second kid, we discovered items we would never use again.

So for two days, and shelling out enough money to the babysitter for her to buy a truckload of chocolate, we sorted through stuff and filled six moving boxes, not counting the furniture. The American Legion guy was impressed when he came by to help us shuttle it to the sale.

"Good thing we brought a step-van," he said.

Now I'm not much of a salesman. I have done it, but I don't like it. I don't even like to haggle over prices, which is why I often leave car buying to the wife, years ago, when I bought cars, that is.

I'm even worse about garage sales, patio sales and the like. I can't get past the notion that people are walking by the table, evaluating the merchandise and deciding whether or not, for example, those Docker's shorts (retail $18.95 on sale), are worth $1, given who the previous wearer was.

Then, given the small nature of the island, you see them on the person later, and they look better on them then they ever looked on you. It's gut-wrenching.

What's more, they're evaluating you, as well as the merchandise.

"Are they such lazy schlubs that they don't bother to use this perfectly good bread maker?"

Well, we bought it with the best of intentions, even told ourselves we'd save money making, rather than buying bread, but the bread-thing just never took off at our house.

The best thing the American Legion did was coordinate with Bargain Bazaar so that when the sale was over what didn't sell at our table remained for them, and I didn't have to cart it anywhere else. I made a few bucks on stuff I was going to donate anyway, and left the rest.

Now that's a bargain.

Resident cuts ties with Pohnpei carvers

I am writing this to warn the people of Kwajalein of a bad experience I had while on vacation in Pohnpei last August. Like most tourists, I went to the woodcarvers village, and as always, the selection was good at most of the shops.

At one shop, "The Carving Spot," the shop owner showed us mostly unfinished pieces. When asked, he said that he could finish them or custom craft a carving to order. I had another five days there, so I ordered a whale with a cribbage board carved in its back. I went back to pick up the whale on Friday, the day I left, and although they were finished carving, they were not finished with the varnishing. The owner said they would be on the next flight and like a chump I believed him.

Well, that flight came and many more since. I have sent two friends going there to his shop and still no carvings. The U.S. Embassy has sent a staff member and security officer there and still NO carvings. I give you fair warning about "The Carving Spot." Do not leave a deposit or prepay for any piece. If it's not in your hand, don't reach for your wallet. As for me, I will never spend another dime in Pohnpei and I recommend you enjoy Kosrae.

Mayor, officials commit to working together

By KW Hillis
Associate Editor

New Ebeye mayor Johnny Lemari pledged to work with the community and the local and national governments to solve the problems on Ebeye during the Kwajalein Atoll Local Government inauguration ceremony, Friday.

"United we stand, divided we fall," said The Rev. Lawson Matauto, United Church of Christ, echoing the sentiments of the new mayor and Senator and Iroj Michael Kabua, when he closed the formal ceremony in the brightly decorated, packed church.

Registered voters all over the Republic of the Marshall Islands, went to polls Nov. 17 to elect both national and local government officials. On Kwajalein Atoll islands, about 2,100 registered voters cast their ballots for Kwajalein Atoll mayor and all nine council positions, along with votes for a senator to represent them in the Nitijela, or national government council. The RMI Ministry of Internal Affairs, located in Majuro, runs the elections and counts the votes.

Once counted, Johnny Lemari won the mayoral race over two other candidates — Noda Lojkar and Jack Akeang. Of the nine council seats, five new members — John Kabua, Felix Loeak, Paul Kabua, Watson Lemari and Herrington Dribo — joined four incumbents — Togo Langrine, Rane Bolkeim, Aruo Aluka and George Luther, for four-year terms.

Sen. Kabua and senators representing other islands, along with the RMI president were inaugurated in Majuro yesterday (see Friday's Hourglass article).

During the opening ceremony, many in the audience made the mayor-elect and the councilmen-elect as decorated as the church by bestowing leis, wuts and gifts.

Judge Billy Samson first swore in the councilmen and then Lemari, who placed his hand on the Bible held by his wife, Barki.

In his first speech as mayor, Lemari addressed a pressing issue brought up by senator-elect Kabua, the lack of salt water being pumped to homes which is used in the plumbing system on Ebeye, according to Hiram Malolo, RMI Representative to USAKA. Malolo, along with Twilyn Sheet, Host Nation intern, explained many of the key points in Lemari's and Kabua's speeches spoken in Marshallese.

"This is a crisis," Lemari said, explaining that his first assignment on Tuesday morning would be to meet with the Kwajalein Atoll Joint Utility Resources manager to find out what can be done.

In addition to making sure all the island services function correctly for the community, Lemari is instituting a 10 p.m. curfew for children, since children are roaming around all night, Malolo said.

Later, in his closing speech, Matauto added that the problem with the children was also plaguing the church.

Since the children were not getting enough sleep, they were not coming to church anymore, the minister said.

The mayor also focused on making sure the Marshall Islands Social Security Administration or MISSA continues to pay their debts.

"He said it is not going to be easy. It's going to be very difficult because of the operational budget. It is going to be very tight," Malolo said.

In his speech, Kabua spoke on behalf of the traditional leaders, not as a senator, Sheet said.

"He was advising everybody to work together with the new mayor and new council," she said. "He pointed out that they should be available to everybody in the community at all times."

Both Kabua and Lemari mentioned coming together as a community so Ebeye can have a cleaner, safer and better future.

"The main thing is to work with other people about the many problems on Ebeye," Malolo explained in translation of Lemari's comments. "He said he would continue to work and keep good working relations with USAKA."

Carlson residents waded into the lagoon Friday afternoon to help unload gifts and supplies from the first boat during the Christian Women’s Fellowship Christmas Drop.

By April Brown
Reporter

Children ran along the beach waving their arms as the boats approached Carlson Island Friday afternoon during the Christian Women’s Fellowship Christmas Drop. As the boats maneuvered through the reef amidst strong waves, residents gathered on the shore waiting to help unload the supplies and greet the guests.

The Christmas Drop is an annual trip made by the CWF every January, said Leigh Wilhelm, CWF member, who organized this year’s drop. The project began around five years ago when the organization was approached by Leiroij Seagull Kabua James. Carlson, at the time, was one of the only islands not receiving a drop and since it was a smaller community with only 50 residents, the CWF said they would enjoy the opportunity to do a drop there, said Lora Kendrick, CWF member.

Once the boats were anchored in a trench the islanders had created for easier boat access, the unloading process began. Plastic cartons filled with goods, bags of toys for children and cartons of food were unloaded onto the shore and then carted down the beach to the island’s community center. A raft, donated by the USAKA Host Nation office, was used to transport the goods from the boat over the reef to the shore. All of the guests from Kwajalein were presented with fragrant flower leis upon their arrival.

The gifts were placed in the center of the room as the residents and volunteers took seats around the mountain of presents. Filled plastic containers held household goods for each of the nine families on Carlson. The children all received teddy bears and toys. Containers of juice mix and graham crackers rested next to bags filled with Barbie dolls.

The last two containers brought in held a special treat for residents as volunteers Sylvia Riley and Patty Cisneros began serving cups of strawberry ice cream and glasses of homemade lemonade. Children gathered in the building to enjoy their ice cream as they perused the gifts waiting for them.

Gabi Wilhelm, 8, maneuvered her way around the room with a box of donuts and then made another trip with a basket of toys for the children. Residents then brought in coconuts, pandanus, bananas, chicken and rice to feed the hungry volunteers. As everyone enjoyed the variety of food, the residents gathered on one side of the room to sing songs and thank the volunteers.

“God created us and put us on this earth to love each other and work together,” said Jurju Kemem, a Carlson resident, interpreted by USAKA Ombudsman Noda Lojkar. Kemem’s son, Yoshi, is an investigator for the Kwajalein Police Department.

The group sang several songs in Marshallese, their feet tapping in time to the words. Kemem spoke for all as he thanked the volunteers.

“We know the gifts and things you brought to us with love,” Kemem said.

At the end of their presentation the residents circled the room shaking hands with all of the volunteers and presenting them with handmade necklaces and wuts, or traditional headdresses. The Rev. Rick Funk, protestant chaplain, rose and thanked the residents for the presentation. He introduced the three organizers of the day’s trip, Leigh Wilhelm, Sheri Davis and Polly Keller, CWF president. Keller thanked the residents for the opportunity to join them.

“Thank you very, very much for making us feel so warm and welcome,” she said with tears in her eyes. “It’s been very special.”

Funk also recognized Maj. David Coffey, Stephan Notarianni and Lojkar, all representing the USAKA Host Nation office.

“I just wanted to say thank you on behalf of [USAKA Commander] Col. Jerry Brown and USAKA but this was really the women you’ve met today, we’re just here supporting,” Coffey said.

Kemem spoke for all when he again thanked the volunteers and provided them an open invitation to return whenever they wanted. The volunteers then rose and sang Polly Keller, CWF president, becomes emotional as she thanks the residents for welcoming the organization for this special event.

“Amazing Grace” and “Joy to the World.” Guests went on a tour of Carlson, where they explored the garden and walked down toward the residents’ homes where they discovered bins of baby turtles.

The turtles were found on the beach, lagoon side of the island, Kemem said. The residents brought the turtles up from the shore and are caring for them until they are a little bigger and can be released on the ocean side of the island.

While part of the group left on the tour, Keller, Wilhelm and Davis spoke with residents about supplies the islanders need. The volunteers left with a list that they will use to plan their next drop. Residents were then told that another drop would be made in about a month with help from the Host Nation office, Keller said.

“We ordered stock pots which haven’t come in yet,” she said.

When the pots arrive, which are used when cooking outdoors over open flames, they will be delivered along with a load of Tupperware containers for residents.

As volunteers made their way back to the boats, children followed shaking their hands and yelling their farewells.

December marks second hottest on record

By Kris White
3D Research Meteorologist

Kwajalein followed the hottest November on record with an almost equally hot December.

We posted an average temperature of 83.1 F for the month, which is 1.4 F above normal.

In fact, it was enough to go down as the second warmest December since 1946. The hottest December occurred in 1951 when we recorded an average temperature of 83.5 F.

This month, our warmest days fell on the 2nd, 3rd and 4th when the mercury topped out at 89 F each day, just shy of the record of 90 F set in 1955.

The coolest temperature was a bone chilling, for Kwaj, 74 F, which occurred during a heavy shower event during the night of the 4th. The record low for the month is an even chillier 69 F set in 1963.

Likewise, sea-surface temperatures continued an above normal trend that began in February. Sea-surface temperatures in the vicinity averaged 84.8 F, 1.6 F above the long-term average.

December rainfall was plentiful following a dry November. The weather station recorded a respectable 11.78" of precipitation for the month, making it the 11th wettest December since 1945. The normal precipitation for the month is 7.94".

Given the relative abundance of precipitation, we still recorded nine days in which only a trace or less of precipitation fell at the weather station. As is often the case here, most of the precipitation during the month was received in a short period of time.

You may remember the soaking we received on the 21st, when 4.65" fell on Kwajalein. After adding in two other relatively wet days when 1.67" and 1.24" of precipitation was recorded, we find 64 percent of the precipitation for the entire month in just three days.

For weather fans, the wettest December occurred in 1950 when the weather station recorded an incredible 30.38" of precipitation. That also stands as the wettest month on record.

The driest December occurred in 1971 when just 1.90" of rain fell at the station.

In November, it began to look as though El Niño conditions were reemerging in the central Pacific. Then, the complex interplay between atmosphere and ocean did an about face, leading scientists to announce on Dec. 11, that neutral conditions looked likely across the Pacific for the next six to nine months. Neutral conditions would mean near normal conditions in the central Pacific.

Taking the Oath

President-elect Kessai Note takes the oath of office Monday at the Republic of the Marshall Islands Nitijela chambers in Majuro. His wife, First Lady Mary Note held the Bible. Dignitaries from around the Pacific attended the event. See the complete story in Friday's Hourglass.

"County" brings country to islands

From Staff Reports

Kwajalein will see a bit of country next week with three performances by Trace County.

Sponsored by Armed Forces Entertainment, the group returns from a Pacific tour that took them to three bases in Japan and a stop in Guam, before coming to Kwajalein.

Advertised as a "Redneck Meets Rock Revival" the three-man country band recently released their first album "Something Left Behind," with tracks "Over Texas," "Kentucky Dreams" and "The Drifter."

The group hails from Spokane, Wash., and features 21-year-old Jerome McComb on lead vocals, joined by his older brother, veteran drummer Gary Hassler. Greg Stephens, a 15-year professional, rounds out the trio.

The band will perform 7:30 p.m. Jan. 22, at Roi-Namur's Outrigger Bar. Friday, Jan. 23, the band will headline a family-style barbecue on Emon Beach with a performance beginning at 6 p.m. KRS Food Services will offer food for the occasion. The band wraps up their Kwajalein set on Saturday with a 9 p.m. gig at Gilligan's Bar on Kwajalein.

Speaker and students dig archaeology lesson

By April Brown
Reporter

Children ranging from the fourth through the sixth grade gathered in the George Seitz Elementary School Music Room Saturday afternoon for Kristin Hartnett's talk on The Bones and Stones of Anthropology.

A year long effort to have Hartnett come to Kwajalein and speak on her experiences came to fruition when Hartnett came for a visit to see her family who lives here, said Gina Bennett, fifth grade teacher. Bennett, who instructed her students in the discovery of Otzi the Iceman, informed students of Hartnett's own visit to see the 5,300 year old man, discovered in Italy.

"My dad and I went to this part of Italy just so I could see the Iceman," Hartnett said, commenting on how well-preserved he was. "They could tell what his last meal was, which consisted of meat, flat bread and greens."

Hartnett, who is currently pursuing her Ph.D. in forensic anthropology at Arizona State University, divided her presentation into two sections, fielding questions from students throughout. She opened her presentation with an explanation of what anthropology was before launching into her experiences in Central America studying the Maya culture, where she has spent her summers for the past four years doing archaeological digs.

Using a slide show, Hartnett showed the students photos from two Mayan villages, Chan Chich and Punta De Cacao, while dispelling beliefs that her job is like an Indiana Jones film.

"We're not Indiana Jones riding out with a whip, I don't have a whip but I do have a machete," she said, smiling in response to the gasps from the audience.

She showed pictures from a variety of digs, one where she is actually under a house floor and another where she and a colleague had to position themselves across planks in a traditional Mayan burial site for a king. After describing the process of removing artifacts, she pulled up a slide that displayed the tools she uses regularly on a dig. The only item missing was her machete which appeared in a later photo where she was about to lead three of her students into a jungle in search of ancient temples. Before moving onto the second portion of her presentation, Hartnett showed the students photos she had taken of a tarantula that had climbed into her bed and a jaguar she saw when she was out with National Geographic photographers.

The second portion of her presentation introduced a subject the students were more familiar with when she showed photos of Otzi the Iceman, discovered by hikers in 1991. Hartnett explained all of the different reasons why scientists had yet to discover the cause of death, since Otzi was so fragile.

Hartnett currently works for Disaster Mortuary Operational Response Team that is deployed in the case of large disasters to care for the deceased. She was among the second wave that reported to New York in response to September 11.

"I worked at the landfill," she said. "Anthropologists went through every piece of debris and pulled out every piece of human remains. That was our job, to make sure that nothing was missed."

DNA samples were taken of every piece so that all of the deceased could be identified for their families, she said.

After studying archaeology for her undergrad at Cornell University, Hartnett earned her master's degree from Arizona State, specializing in the study of Mayan culture. Once she earns her Ph.D., Hartnett wants to work in recovering war dead and returning them to their country of origin, she said.

"Just after I get my Ph.D. that's what I want to do [for a couple of years]," she said. "I'm hoping at some point to teach at a university, teach college kids and have my own research at Chan Chich so I can keep going back."
