Farewell from a fair weather reporter

Here goeth my farewell editorial... Those crazy kids I work with (Dan and Jan) said I had to do another farewell editorial. I wasn't planning on one, because I had said my farewells before, but in reading over the past ones, I realized that in each of them I knew I was coming back. I knew at some point I would definitely be back on Kwaj hanging out with my friends again. That is not the case anymore. Although I have high hopes for a Kwaj '05 return, there are no guarantees.

I've been spoiled in my life. I recognize that fact. I have been blessed by a wonderful family that has always been supportive of me. And I have been blessed with the opportunity to work and spend time with many of you. I've said before that I have grown during my time here. Maybe I'm not mature yet, but I do feel I have changed, and for the better. It's amazing to be out here and hear anyone complain.

I have enjoyed my time here, and there are certain people who have made it very special for me. It's not often that you get the opportunity to thank people who have had an impact on your life. This is my chance and there are some people I would like to thank.

First and foremost, Lateef, thank you for being a friend to me, a shoulder to cry on and a goof when I needed to laugh. There are some people in this world that you just connect with, they understand you and you understand them. You get me, and I don't have to say anything, you just know what's on my mind. I respect and love you for being the man you are. Stay the course, there is much you have to accomplish in your life and I hope to see you again soon.

Johnny and Moses, my favorite lifting buddies. You guys are both awesome, and I always enjoyed spending time with you. I hope to see both of you soon, you owe me since you skipped my graduation... shall we make that trip to Europe after all? Thanks for looking out for me and being good friends. Our day on the water was something I'll never forget.

Brandon, Laura, Travis, Jesus, Nick, Joanna, Marie, Loren and Jenn: I don't think there are words that I can say that can thank you enough. I've spent time with different groups of people out here, and I have enjoyed myself, but my best memories of Kwaj are with you all. You accepted me and I had a fabulous time hanging out with all of you. I know I'll see you all in the future, Maryland here we come!

To my special someone. We already said our good-byes, but I hope you get a chance to read this. I will always have a special place in my heart for you, you know how I feel. I hope to see you again soon. All my love.

Jan and Dan: People have no idea, they just have no clue. You two are both amazing people to work with. You're talented and dedicated. You gave me confidence in my work and pushed me to pursue my dream. Part of the reason I am going to grad school this fall is because of my experiences with you (and of course the mysterious Jim Bennett). Thank you for your dedication to the Hourglass, for sticking with it during the tough times. The rest of the community has no clue

Force Stabilization increases readiness, predictability

By Joe Burlas
Army News Service

Editor's note: This is the fifth in a series of articles on Army Chief of Staff Gen. Peter Schoomaker's focus areas. This one also coincides with a major announcement on initiatives to stabilize the force.

WASHINGTON - Force Stabilization is one of the 16 focus areas Army Chief of Staff Gen. Peter Schoomaker identified last fall that the Army will work to remain ready and relevant in the near term and the future. "We think by stabilizing the Army, where we don't move the Army every two to three years on an individual basis, but we keep people in place, develop cohesive, stable units, where spouses can work, where kids can go to school, where people can invest in homes and develop equity, stabilizes forces," Schoomaker told members of the House Armed Services Committee, Jan. 28. "It's better for the fighting forces. It's better for the families. And, it will increase our retention." To stabilize soldiers and their families in the near term, the Army plans to implement two strategies -- home-basing and Unit Focused Stability, said Col. Paul Thornton who has been working the issue for the past 17 months as a member of the Unit Manning Task Force and chief of its successor, Task Force Stabilization. Under home-basing, all initial entry soldiers -- enlisted and officers -- initially assigned to selected installations will remain on their initial duty-assignment installation following training for six to seven years. This allows soldiers and their families time to grow community roots and have a known family support structure in place for those families if the soldiers deploy, Thornton said. It also allows predictability in where they will be for a longer period than the current system permits, he said. Currently, the average assignment tour length for enlisted initial entry soldiers is about 31 months, said Brig. Gen. Sean Byrne, director of Military Personnel Policy, G-1. home-basing does not apply to mid-term or career soldiers, only initial entry soldiers, Thornton said, but should lead to return assignments to the Home-base for all soldiers eventually. Nor does the initiative stop home-based soldiers being levied for short-term assignments at other locations. Soldiers need to know that there may be a chance they'll have to do other things during their initial extended tour-- short tours in Korea, Bosnia, Kosovo -- but with home-basing, they will return to their initial-assignment installations, Byrne said. The six-to-seven-year career mark for ending home-basing was established because that is the point where the Army's manning needs outside of tactical units significantly increases, Thornton said. "It's the point where that initial entry officer has made captain, completed a company command, and the Army may need that officer as a Pentagon staff officer, an instructor at the schoolhouse, or to complete advanced civilian schooling," Thornton said. "The enlisted soldier will have likely made sergeant by that time and is ready for assignment as a recruiter, drill sergeant or an instructor." Leader development training, such as basic and advanced noncommissioned officer course, and the captain's career course should not be impacted by Home-basing, as soldiers will be sent to that training on temporary duty and then return to the installation. Home-basing is set to start at selected Forces Command installations with divisional brigade combat teams sometime in the fourth quarter of the current fiscal year. It will eventually include most FORSCOM bases in the United States and may include some combined FORSCOM / Training and Doctrine Command posts, Byrne said. Under the second initiative, UFS, all members of a unit initially arrive at the same time and are stabilized in that unit for three years. "Optimally, if you want to build unit cohesion, you keep members of a team together through training, deployment and employment," Thornton said. "This is about building more capable warfighting units that require less train-up time when alerted for deployment." The Army understands that losses occur to any unit due to medical, administrative, hardship or judicial issues, Thornton said, so there is a plan for an annual package of replacements who would remain with the unit through the remainder of the 36-month unit lifecycle. Individual replacements for key positions will be filled as required and requested by the unit, he said. A key aspect to UFS is that the majority of these scheduled replacements joining the unit will be initial entry soldiers. "Let's say you need to replace a company commander due to a loss," Thornton said. "His replacement will come from within -- somebody who has been with the unit at the start of the unit lifecycle, somebody like the company executive officer or one of the battalion staff officers. Then you take a senior platoon leader and backfill the position left vacant. The initial entry replacement comes in and then fills the empty platoon leader position. It works the same way on the enlisted side." Recruiters have been armed with a variable enlistment incentive to encourage those entering the Army to sign on for duty with a UFS unit. Recruits who sign up for the bonus must serve on active duty the amount of time it takes them to complete basic and advanced individual training plus three years in the unit rather than the standard three, four or six-year enlistment. Opportunity for leader development training, such as basic and advanced noncommissioned officer course and the captain's career course will continue under UFS, only the timing of attendance may be affected. The 172nd Infantry Brigade based at Fort Wainwright, Ala., is the first Army unit to use UFS when it started the process to become the Army's third Stryker Brigade Combat Team this past summer. UFS will take longer to implement across the Army than home-basing because of operational requirements and the need for coordination with multiple Army organizations for each unit transitioning to the new manning system, Thornton said. Eventually, the Army plans to transition one brigade combat team a month, he said. Both Force Stabilization initiatives should not impact anybody's chances for promotion, Byrne said, as promotions are based upon Army requirements, not unit requirements. "We are increasing the readiness of the Army through stability and unit cohesion, while providing more predictability to soldiers and their families," Byrne said. "We have always said that we enlist soldiers and reenlist families."

Mid-Atoll Corridor

In preparation for Wednesday's GT-184 mission, KPD marine police officers, led by Mike Herrington and Greg Joneson, checked the mid-atoll corridor to warn fishing camps of the impending mission and provide transportation off the islands if it was needed. The west reef was swept on Sunday and the east reef on Monday.

what kind of tough times you face. It has been my honor to work with both of you.

Thanks to the Kwaj community for accepting all of us. This has been home for me in a way no other assignment has ever been and I will truly miss it. As you read this I'm somewhere over the Pacific, heading off for new adventures but I will always have fond memories of this place.

Finally, thank you to the Marshallese community. I've learned so much from you, about the importance of family, how to treat others. And that is why I send out this request now to the American community. Please take the time to get to know your Marshallese neighbors if you haven't already. I know that there are those of you who have lived here for many years and never really gotten to know your host nation. Please treat them with the respect that they deserve, because God knows they've been respectful to many of you.

Thank you everyone. My time with you is at an end and so I'll leave you with a quote that has taken me down new paths.

"Life is not a problem to be solved, but a reality to be experienced."

Malolo thanks Brown on behalf of RMI

Hiram Malolo, RMI Representative to USAKA, met with Col. Jerry Brown, USAKA commander, Thursday afternoon to thank him for his support of the Marshallese people during his tenure. Malolo thanked Brown for his assistance to the local islands, medical treatment and quick response to requests from the RMI office and the Community Relations Council. Because of his service, Brown had a beach named after him in Lae atoll in the Ralik chain.

Malolo presented Brown with an outrigger canoe and words of farewell.

"Whenever you get tired in Japan, you can get on the boat and come to Lae Beach," he said.
