

A day octopus pulls itself out of its lair at Anemone Hill near Emon Beach while Kwaj divers observe.

HOURGLASS REPORTS

his day octopus (Octopus cyanea; also referred to as the "big blue octopus") was recently photographed by Kwajalein resident Karen Simas at a dive location called Anemone Hill, located off Emon Beach.

Found throughout the Pacific and Indian Oceans, day octopuses are on the larger side, with bodies reaching at least six inches in length and legs growing to at least 2.5 feet in length. They excavate lairs in coral reefs for protection, which may be identified by the small piles of shells and other remnants of prey that they leave outside.

Because the species feeds during the day-hence its common name-it has developed an exceptional ability to camouflage itself. Powered by nervous impulses sent out by their large, complex brains, the octopuses constantly actuate muscles all over their bodies to produce changing color patterns and skin textures to blend in to the sand, rocky coral or debris that surrounds them. The trait makes them hard to pick out by would-predators, such as Hawaiian monk seals, large fish, sharks, dolphins and, of course, humans and gives them an edge when out on the prowl for shrimp, fish, crabs and other mollusks.

The day octopus has not yet been listed as threatened or endangered by the International Union for the Conservation of Nature.

HEREDITARY KINGS OF THE MARSHALL ISLANDS: THEN AND NOW. ORIGINALLY PRINTED IN THE KWAJALEIN HOURGLASS JUNE 15, 1969. BY PAT CATALDO

In the time of the whalers

n the early 1800s, before the missionaries, in the time of the whalers, the most powerful clan in the Ralik Marshalls was the Ejjowa, in the southern islands of Ebon, Jaluit, Namorikk, Kili and Ailinglaplap. In those days, everyone in the Ejjowa Clan was an iroij or had the blood of iroij. The name of the great Ejjowa king was Jemeliut.

Then a cunning, ruthless and powerful king arose from the Ijidrik Clan in the northern islands of Kwajalein, Ujae, Lae and Wotho. He was Lannini of Wotho, who was to gather a great war party and conquer the Ejjowa.

Lannini is sometimes known as Lannini Kabel (Lannini the Smart) for the ways he outsmarted his enemies. For instance, he made a special point to have some of his blood in the Ejjowa clan in order to gain control of that clan. He arranged marriages of some of his sisters (including, by custom, his mother's sister's daughters) to Ejjowa Clan bwirak who controlled the eastern islands of Ebon, Kili and Namorik. (*bwirak are sons of an iroij father and a commoner mother; while not so powerful as those whose parents are both of royal blood, they are nevertheless members of royalty and landowners.)

Because of Marshallese customs, sons born to these sisters regarded their uncle, Lannini, as their chief (*Again: Marshallese children are born into their mother's clan, which is always different from their father's clan.)

Lannini the Hypocrite

This wily king is also known as Lannini Etao (Lannini the Hypocrite), and the following stories show why.

It was typical of Lannini to kill anyone in his clan who became too powerful. One time he made up his mind that the husband of one of his own sisters must be eliminated.

First, he privately told some of his subjects to bring him five or six coconut shells filled with jenneb, a very nourishing, satisfying liquid food made by mixing water with a dried cake of boiled pandanus juice. Then he secretly dispatched a warrior to behead his brother-in-law.

When reports of the death reached him, Lannini refused all food for two weeks, limiting himself to what everyone supposed were sips of water from the coconut shells. In reality, he was sustaining himself very well on the jenneb. His sister assumed that Lannini was fasting to join her in mourning, and so no trouble arose between them.

Two With One Blow

Another time, Lannini was living on Woja, an island on Ailinglaplap Atoll where there lived two other iroij, one of whom was very powerful. To eliminate both kings, Lannini devised a sly plan. When he caught a big fish he sent the head to the powerful iroij and only the tail to the other. When he sent breadfruit Lannini sent betaktak (the best kind) to the powerful chief and mejwan (the poorest kind) to the other.

Then Lannini had his people report to the lesser iroij that he was sorry he could send only mejwan and the tails of fish, but he was afraid of the powerful iroij and must send the best to him.

Enraged by these humiliations, the lesser iroij gathered his warriors and killed the other chief. Free from the threat of his powerful enemy, Lannini soon killed the remaining iroij.

Strange Idiosyncrasy

Lannini had a strange idiosyncrasy, the memory of which is preserved in a Marshallese saying, Ejerakrok in Lannini, which means "Lannini's kind of sailing." It is told that Lannini would announce, "Tomorrow we sail from Kwajalein to make war on the south." Everyone would hurry to collect supplies and meet on the beach ... only to find that Lannini really meant, "We will sail any time from now on," perhaps as much as a year later. Ejerakrok in Lannini might be the response of a contemporary Marshall Islander to someone who off-handedly suggests, "Let's sail to Ailinglaplap tomorrow."

AN EXCHANGE

U.S. ARMY GARRISON-KWAJALEIN ATOLL COMMANDER COL. NESTOR SADLER

will finish his tour of duty on the installation next week, two years after taking command in the summer of 2013. In an interview with the Kwajalein Hourglass, Sadler discusses both the challenges and successes he's experienced during his tour of duty on the atoll, the aspects of the garrison he'll miss the most and the cherished memories of Kwaj, Roi and neighboring islands that he'll take with him into the future. Interview and 👩 by Jordan Vinson

What are some of the highlights of your tenure at U.S. Army Garrison-Kwajalein Atoll?

Really the highlight was just having the honor and the privilege to serve with such a professional, diverse, resilient and dedicated group of people on the island across the board. So that's really and truly the highlight of my career and my command.

What goals did you have in mind when you took Command in the summer of 2013? Did you meet those goals?

I had several objectives or goals. One was the transfer of the installation from the Space and Missile Defense Command to the Installation Management Command. And one of the things that I worked hard to do was to make that as seamless as possible. I think for the most part it was; it didn't really have an impact on the community in terms of an impact on the missions and mission support. I think that went extremely well. Another goal for me was to make sure that I was a visible leader throughout the community, one that was involved in a lot of different aspects, not just focused centrally on military issues and military personnel. Whether there were contractor issues or concerns, Marshallese and Host Nation issues and concerns and so on, my goal was to be on it. And just being a part of the community. I think I did that extremely well. I was involved in a lot of activities and groups, whether it was playing tennis with the tennis club, going scuba diving or saying farewell to community members at many PCS parties. Lastly, the objective was to simply emphasize and enhance the strength of the garrison as a community or a family of families—the Kwaj and Roi family.

You're closing in on two years of command of USAG-KA. Knowing now what you didn't know when you first took command, is there anything that you would have done differently?

No, I don't think I would have done anything differently per se. However, there are things that I wish I could have accomplished or done more of. And primarily this centers on resources. I wish I could have brought in more monies. I wish I could have brought in more equipment. And I wish I could have brought in more Department of the Army civilian personnel.

training pipeline.

What will your next assignment be?

I will be the Commandant for the Special Forces Regiment at the

John F. Kennedy Special Warfare

Center and School at Fort Bragg,

What responsibilities will you have

As the Commandant I'll serve as the doctrine integrator for everything relating to Special

Forces training. It's an opportunity for me to actually give back and pay forward to all the young Soldiers that will be coming through our Special Forces

North Carolina.

as Commandant?

That ties into your previous experience working within the Special Forces, correct?

Yes, I've been in the Special Forces ever since 1993, and every Special Forces officer has to go through the Special Forces Assessment and Selection Training as well as the Special Forces qualification courses and all of the other courses and schools that our Special Warfare Center and School operates. So being able to go back there and be part of that institution is actually an honor. To be able to bring the young paratroopers and young Special Forces Soldiers through the same training that I went through 23 years ago is quite exciting.

Those are the things that, in my tenure, I got after and got some results, but definitely not what I would have liked to have seen happen.

You've been in one of the most challenging jobs on the garrison. What were some of the major obstacles that you had to confront during your tenure as Commander?

The lack of resources, primarily adequate resources to address the facilities issues and deferred maintenance issues. Those are probably the biggest challenges here across the board. It will continue for some time until sustained funding comes to the garrison and we start getting after things we need to get after.

What will you miss about USAG-KA?

It's about the people, and that's really what I'm going to miss: good people and a great, family-oriented community. Everyone here is ready to help and assist everyone else. So it's the people, by far, whom I'm going to miss most of all after Monica and I leave.

How would you like to be remembered after you leave?

I'd like to be remembered simply as a passionate, fair and effective leader. And, really, that pretty much sums it up. My legacy really isn't about me or how people remember me, but really how I left the Command in terms of its reputation and its ability to continue to build on the successes of the previous 27 other Commanders of this installation. I'm just one of many. It's as part of the Command's overall legacy that I should really be remembered.

What advice would you give to the next Commander?

One of the things we were able to successfully do in my two years is get Kwaj on the map. What I mean by that is that Kwajalein is now being talked about throughout the Pentagon. As you guys know, the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff Gen. Martin Dempsey was here. The Triple Crown-as I like to call them-the Secretaries of the Army, Air Force and Navy-have been to Kwaj. Space and Missile Defense Commander Lt. Gen. David Mann is a big advocate of Kwaj and has done an excellent job in getting the word out to our government folks, our money folks. Kwaj is on the map. It's a known place albeit very small. Everyone in the building in the Pentagon knows Kwaj and knows our concerns and challenges. So that's a good news story. Keeping this interest in USAG-KA up, then, will be advantageous for the coming Commander and his successors.

GARRISON EMPLOYEES HONORED FOR 10 YEARS OF SERVICE

Kwajalein Range Services employees who reached an impressive 10-year employment record on the garrison are honored by community leaders July 25.

HOURGLASS REPORTS

A couple of dozen Kwajalein Range Services employees Were commended July 25 for reaching an impressive milestone in their professional careers.

At a special luncheon prepared by Kwajalein Range Services management at the Corlett Recreation Center, the employees were acknowledged for having worked 10 consecutive years on the Army installation.

"You all have done an outstanding job in each of your work areas," said Brian Coombe, KRS deputy project manager for business services at CRC Room 1. "10 years is not an insignificant amount of time. That's a decade of work and dedication to the mission that this installation supports and the community that lives on it. Without all of you we wouldn't we where we are today. So again, thank you sincerely for your tireless work, and may the next 10 years in your careers be just as successful."

The employees whom community leaders recognized July 25 work in a variety of fields, from telemetry and computer networking, to logistics and warehousing, to human resources, construction and other areas.
