HOURGLASS INTERVIEWS

AMBASSADOR KARENA LYONS

NEW ZEALAND AMBASSADOR TO THE REPUBLIC OF THE MARSHALL ISLANDS, THE FEDERATED STATES OF MICRONESIA AND PALAU

FEATURE/JORDAN VINSON

Karena Lyons is New Zealand's ambassador to the Marshall Islands, Federated States of Micronesia and Palau. She also serves as the consul general to the state of Hawaii, where she works closely with U.S. Pacific Command (PACOM) on regional security issues. Lyons was on U.S. Army Garrison-Kwajalein Atoll in March on an assignment with US-PACOM, and she took a few minutes to chat with the Kwajalein Hourglass about her job and country.

JV: What brings you to Kwajalein Atoll, and what do you think of the place?

KL: Ours is the first New Zealand delegation to visit either Kwajalein Island or Ebeye. So we're really grateful to the commander and his team for granting us access to the base. I'm here, because I am New Zealand's lead in interfacing with Pacific Command. So, I've come here specifically to talk shop on that front. Also it's a fascinating place. It's the largest atoll in the world; the history and geography of this place is incredible. So I jumped at the opportunity to come here. I've heard lots of stories about Ebeye, and they're all true. The people are friendly, with the cutest kids in the world. And they've definitely got challenges, but I was heartened to meet with the leadership there and a number of community and traditional leaders. They're really focused on working together to make sure the people of Ebeye are getting what they need.

JV: Can you elaborate on your role interfacing with PACOM?

KL: New Zealand has a consulate general in Honolulu. We're a relatively new post there; we opened in 2014. The reason we opened was two-fold. Firstly, recognition of the importance of the strategic hub that is PACOM. Secondly, a symbol of our relationship with the United States; opening other posts is a government's way of saying, "Hey, you're really important to us. We really like you a lot. We want to send some of our people there." And luckily for me I get that job. So I work quite closely with Admiral Harris and his whole team and the various commanders across the combatant command to ensure that New Zealand and the U.S. continue to co-operate throughout the region on security issues, from the strategic level, to the operational level, to the people-to-people level. It's an important time to make sure that friends stick together.

JV: What are a few of New Zealand's current goals and initiatives for the bilateral relationships it maintains with Palau, the Marshall Islands and Micronesia?

KL: At the end of last year, in October, New Zealand elected a new government and at the beginning of this year, they've come out quite strongly with a re-energized focus on the Pacific. We're calling it a reset, and the official policy and strategy is called shifting the dial. Which is exciting for us and the embassy, because we love our work. It's the perfect excuse to really step up and deepen our engagement with the Pacific. If we were to separate out the priorities into regional and bilateral, the regional front with the northern Pacific states, we're working on ... big, symbolic pieces.

On the economic front, our priority would be free trade agreements. The majority of the Pacific have already signed up to it. And Palau and the Marshall Islands and Micronesia are still working on the draft through their respective systems. ... And, of course, climate change is a regional priority for all Pacific nations, including New Zealand. That tends to dominate a lot of our discussions with the Marshall Islands in particular. ... In practice, this manifests in the renewable energy sector. So New Zealand has a big project, which we only just confirmed. Last week in Majuro, I signed a partnership agreement with the RMI and New Zealand, and that's to do two main things. Firstly, to grant $1.5 million to set out an energy roadmap.

JV: By describing the new New Zealand government as performing a 'reset' and 'shifting the dial,' is the point that the previous government headed less attention to its small island developing state neighbors?

KL: No, not at all. New Zealand is a Pacific nation, and it's a fact; we can't change our geography. It's actually quite common for successive New Zealand governments to focus on the Pacific. And then this government is pouring even more energy into it. One example of this shift is that there are 20-25 ministers in the New Zealand government, and about six or seven of them are of Pacific descent. Auckland, our largest city, is the largest Polynesian city in the world. ... You'll see a lot more Pacific representation in our government. So, this is the first time we've hit such a quorum

THE KWAJALEIN HOURGLASS

The Kwajalein Hourglass is named for the insignia of the U.S. Army 7th Infantry Division, which liberated the island from the forces of Imperial Japan on Feb. 4, 1944.

The Kwajalein Hourglass is an authorized publication for military personnel, federal employees, contractor workers and their families assigned to U.S. Army Garrison-Kwajalein Atoll. Contents of the Hourglass are not necessarily official views of, or endorsed by, the U.S. Government, Department of Defense, Department of the Army or USAG-KA. It is published Saturdays in accordance with Army Regulation 360-1.

USAG-KA ENERGY SAVINGS PROJECT BEGINS

PUBLIC NOTICE

USAG-KA Department of Public Works began the Energy Savings Performance Contract (ESPC) in March 2018. The project is self-funded by energy savings and does not require Sustainment, Restoration and Modernization (SRM) investment. This will improve facilities and infrastructure throughout the garrison, including Bachelor Quarters and Family Housing improvements.

The improvements include building 'enveloping' to create a tighter seal within structures and better insulation, retrofitting and installation of energy-efficient LED lighting, and replacing current air conditioners with mini-split air conditioning systems. All the projects are designed to save energy and be more cost-efficient for our community.

Some phases of the project have already begun. Residents will be contacted by DPW staff to coordinate a date/time for their services to be completed. The projects will take several hours to complete, and may require multiple visits. Contact Public Works at 5-5449 for information.

of Pacific ministers, and I think it's driving an increase. And the New Zealand foreign minister, Minister Peters, has made a bid for even more of our development spending to be on the Pacific. Currently, it's something like 65 percent of our international budget spent in the Pacific. I mean, that's a pretty significant wedge; so this government's looking at even more of that.

JV: In 2015 you were also instrumental in establishing New Zealand's official seat on the United Nations Security Council. What was the mark NZ wanted to leave on the NSC during its tenure, and was that goal accomplished?

KL: For New Zealand, it was a priority to get on the Security Council, because we are invested in a rules based system. So it's important for us to pull our weight. And it is sort of a 30-year endeavor. There's 10 non-permanent seats, and the way that the cycle goes, [a nation's turn] is sort of once a generation. This time around, the world has changed quite a bit since the last time we were on the council, which was 1992-1994. And the sort of major issues of the day were in Africa and the eastern horn. And it's sad to see that some of those issues were still not resolved by the time we got on again. But what had changed, sort of, was the composition of the UN. And of the 193 states in the UN, approximately 105 self-identify as small states, and of that about 50 probably identify as small island states.

So, New Zealand sees itself as a voice, as one of those small island states. So we wanted to try to raise the profile of some of those issues that affect, in particular, Oceania. So we focused on the [small island developing states] and contributed to those nations that wanted to see climate change be put on the agenda of the Security Council, which was a quite nontraditional way of thinking about security issues. And I think, if anything, the mark that we left was ensuring that the voice of small nations could be heard as clearly as the voice of some of the larger nations. Because that was the original purpose of the U.N.—for each country to have an equal voice.

JV: Are you the same Karena Lyons in the music videos on the internet?

KL: Oh, I hate the internet. Yeah, yeah. Well, everybody's got to pay their way through university, right?

JV: Do you still sing and perform in any capacity?

KL: As boring as it sounds, being a diplomat is a full-time job ... but being a New Zealander, you have to do all kinds of things to serve your country. I was at the UN ... I was strategist for our campaign for the Security Council and they rolled me out to sing in front of several thousands of people, which is the only time I've had to properly sing for my country. But not so much anymore. It was fun. I performed a lot when I was going through university. I'm a jazz nerd; that's where I started. And then I wanted to perform for people who were closer to my age than my parents' age. So ... I was in kind of like indie bands with a raw 80s—unfortunately, 80s—touch. I was like a B girl for a local rap artist who toured the U.K. and Australia. I did that when I was a lecturer on the faculty at Auckland University. Yeah, you've got a lot more control over your time when you're teaching at a university. I could gig on the side, and that was fun. We used to play big music festivals.

JV: Did that influence you in terms of where you took your career?

KL: Yeah, a little bit. One of the coolest gigs I ever did—again I was a like a B girl in this big rap group with these guys called The Immigrants. We went to a world music festival in Port Vila in Vanuatu. And it was quite random. ... I had never been to Vanuatu. ... I knew a lot of Polynesia but almost nothing about Melanesia. You have to go there. You have to make a concerted effort to learn about it, because it's so disparate. They speak like 210 languages in Vanuatu; it's an incredible place. And so we were in Port Vila, and there were 10,000 Vanuatians watching us. It's hip hop; it was loud; and it was quite political. It was sort of about people like myself, first generation Pacific islanders and their voice. But I loved the juxtaposition of that and the 10,000 Vanuatians sitting on the ground, cross legged, arms crossed and very politely listening quietly to the whole hip hop performance until the very end when they clapped politely. And apparently they loved it. I thought, "What?" It was very interesting, and it ignited [my interest] in getting out and about to places, and the foreign services is a good way to do that.

JV: The youngest prime minister in New Zealand history, Jacinda Ardern, took office just last year. How has Ardern's own commitments to environmental protections and trade bolstered your own efforts abroad?

KL: I think she symbolizes New Zealand's attempt to be a progressive country in the world. She's 37 years old, and she's pregnant. Prime Minister Ardern and her government have been really clear what their focus will be during this term on three points. The first is sustainability. The second would be inclusion, which is quite a broad ranging topic, but it includes climate change, childhood poverty ... and other things that represent her commitment to protecting the environment. But also, in the simplest terms, just looking after her people. ... The third tenant or pillar of her term will be style. She wouldn't say this, but I think she's really stylish. She was on the cover of a "Vogue" magazine, which is not something many New Zealanders are known for, generally. But what the government means by style is to be as transparent and open as possible and collaborative. The country feels extremely energized around her. They love her; they really like her.

JV: What is your opinion of Peter Jackson's Lord of the Rings trilogy and the subsequent boom in tourism? What benefits and challenges has it posed for New Zealand?

KL: The benefit is that it's become part of our national tourism campaign, and with good reason. It was filmed in New Zealand, other than like orcs and elves and stuff. The landscape really does look like that. We shamelessly flaunt their imagery to remind people that New Zealand is a great place to come and tour around and make new friends. And for challenges, I'm not sure that there are any. We have to assure people that orcs don't exist, but we put that on the information packet when you come in.

JV: Say a resident here has never been to NZ before and has a week to spend there. What do you recommend they do during their time?

KL: You definitely have to go to the South Island, because that's where most of the filming for "Lord of the Rings" was filmed. You can either go in the summer or go in the winter. If you go in the summer, you want to drive around, check out the fjords and make sure you take several pairs of togs (swimsuits) and jandals (flip flops). There's lots of great places to swim. And if you like wine, then the top of the North Island is filled with incredible wineries. And the backbone of New Zealand's economy is agriculture, and that will be readily apparent if you drive around the South Island. If you like cheese, it's awesome. Some of the best cheese in the world; maybe the European Union would beg to differ, but they're not here.

In the North Island there are probably more cultural things to do. So if you go to Rotorua in the middle of the North Island, there are lots of geysers and pools, great for keeping your skin hydrated. ... And then there's Auckland city, which is where I'm from, right there at the top. 1.5 million people live there; it's a quarter of the country. It's great for shopping; it's great for coffee. It's got a great live music scene.

MWR SUPERVISOR SHARES ROI VISION

HOURLASS REPORT

Rob Kent has big ideas for a small island. As Roi Namur's new MWR supervisor, he puts in long hours planning creative and fun events to engage everyone in the Roi community.

"Roi presents an interesting challenge for us," said Kent in an interview March 26. "We always have an influx of visitors who bring their own interests to the island. Then we have our longtime residents. We want to bring everyone together."

That might sound like a tall order but Kent has been preparing for this challenge for years. A native of Mississippi and a Veteran of the U.S. Air Force, Kent brings his knowledge of the military as well as international experience working in the private sector and with MWR.

"In the Middle East, I once helped set up a golf course. Of course we had a lot of sand and no grass. So how do we make the golf experience everyone needs? We decided to get carpet. So, our personnel carried small carpets with them to tee off," Kent said.

Brainstorming great ideas is one of Kent's pastimes. He fondly recalls a coworker in Mosul, Iraq, who serenaded service members with a violin.

"We loved coming up with and sharing ideas," said Kent. "Inevitably, we'd find a way to pull off the idea."

Kent's big ideas are what's brewing on Roi right now. Thus far since his arrival, Kent has successfully launched the St. Patrick's Day celebration at the Roi Outrigger Club, complete with games and trophies hand-crafted in the Hobby Shop. The event pitted visitors against island residents. Everyone had a good time.

Those with a competitive spirit should brace themselves for Kent's next idea: the first-ever mega pizza-eating contest at the Outrigger Club. Together, March 31, two brave souls will each attempt to eat a gigantic calzone: Two pizzas stuffed with every conceivable topping and sandwiched together.

"The loser buys. Each pizza costs $40," said Kent. "This will be fun. If you don't want to compete, you can watch. The money we make will go back into more MWR improvements and purchases for Roi."

U.S. Army photos by Jessica Dambruch

Kent is also ramping up interest in Roi sports and plans to single-handedly relaunch live theater in the atoll.

"Plays, one-acts, skits, improv—I want to do it [all]," Kent said.

If you are a resident of Roi or Kwaj with ideas for new MWR activities, Kent encourages you to stop by and share them. Kent is currently putting together a calendar of upcoming activities for community sports, crafts and events at the Roi Outrigger Club: Visitors, residents and their guests should check out the growing program of offerings and get ready for the unexpected.

"The more we can do to get people outside and sharing the experience of living here, the more fun this is going to be," said Kent. "I'm really grateful to be here on Roi. I want everyone to enjoy living here."

WEEKLY WEATHER LOOKOUT

RTS WEATHER STATION STAFF

WEATHER DISCUSSION: 2018 is the year of the missed dry season. This past January through March we have received over 300 percent of normal precipitation, the second wettest on record for the period. March is ending with nearly 15 inches of rainfall for the month. This is 450 percent above normal rainfall amounts and is the third wettest March on record since 1945. Looking forward showers will be in the area Saturday and decreasing coverage Sunday and Monday. Winds will remain light so expect outdoor activities to feel hot and humid, great beach days. Next week winds return back to moderate ENE trades with continued widely scattered shower coverage. Expecting normal to a little above normal accumulation.

SATURDAY/SUNDAY/MONDAY FORECAST: Winds E-SE Saturday from 10-15 knots with scattered showers. Winds SE Sunday and Monday from 7-12 knots with widely scattered showers.

MID-WEEK FORECAST: Winds becoming ENE-E at 10-15 knots with widely scattered showers.

USAG-KA REPORT

RESIDENTIAL PHONE AND INTERNET UPDATE

Residential internet service on USAG-KA will continue as currently provided through April 2018. We are pending the establishment of the new Joint Venture service estimated to begin May 1, 2018. We do not believe there will be interruption of service during the final transition.

Residential phone billing will be $5 for March 2018 and $5 for April 2018. We are transitioning to a pay ahead process. Stay tuned for more details on how and when to pay this bill. USAG-KA is coordinating with the service activity to ensure that both 911 calling and on-island service is retained in the future at a nominal cost.

The current solution remains: VOIP/Internet calling for long distance through Joint Venture internet service, 911 service provided across the Atoll and we are developing options to continue local area service. Until a permanent service solution is determined, current services will remain in effect.

USAG-KA FMWR GOLF CART RENTAL PROGRAM

The USAG-KA FMWR Golf Cart Rental service will return on Kwajalein beginning Sunday, April 1. There are three golf carts available on Kwajalein and one cart in transit to Roi-Namur. These are standard golf carts, which seat two people and have space for a golf bag in the rear.

These are to be used temporarily while USAG-KA awaits the arrival of ten new multi-passenger "scooters" this summer. The rental hours are: Tuesday - Saturday, 7 a.m. - 7 p.m. at the Kwajalein Library desk, and Sunday - Monday, 7 a.m. - 7 p.m. at the Kwajalein Golf Course Country Club. The rental cost will be $5 per hour.

Rental times will be limited to two hours per customer due to the limited amount of vehicles and high demand. Another important note: There will be no rental available after 7 p.m. because the temporary golf carts do not have headlights or turn signals necessary for safe operation after-dark. These carts are designed for traditional golf course use, not for use on a roadway. A current USAG-KA driver's license is required for vehicle rental. If you have any questions, please contact FMWR office at 5-1559.

EASTER INSPIRATION

COMMUNITY CONNECTION

We live in a volatile world.

It seems like the whole planet has gone insane. The stock market rises and falls, and the political climate is as unstable as the weather; no one seems to have any lasting solutions to bring back a sense of peace and security.

Every day we hear about another school shooter, terrorist attack, or some crazy world leader threatening to nuke us. What's going on?

If you had to pick one of the world's most significant problems to focus on, what would it be? And if you looked at your personal life, what you are facing now; what big issue is causing you the most concern? I don't mean a terrorist attack or a stock market crash, but something distinctive to you.

What overwhelms you? What causes you sleeplessness and worry? What empties you of hope? Is it your job or family? Fear of retirement or personal security? Are you facing a severe illness or worried about future health? Are you concerned if your children will prosper after you are gone? What would it be?

When we dwell on any of these, it can undoubtedly strip us of all our present energy and hope for the future. This year I watched the Olympics when I could. The time change made it challenging, but at least I saw some of the Games without knowing who won individual events. When I watched events that had not been reported on the news, I found myself rather tense when my team was on the edge. When I already knew the outcome, the tension was greatly reduced. Why? There was no surprise. The score was history; I was merely watching old events play out.

For the Christian world this Sunday is Easter: the celebration of the Resurrection of the Crucified Christ. The record of Biblical truth, affirmed repeatedly for nearly 2,000 years, despite skeptics' attempts to disprove the recorded facts, remains solidly in place. Life events continue, and for those of us with genuine faith, the events are merely God's history unfolding to us.

Our lives are centered on the implications of the resurrection and teachings of Christ. As St. Paul says: We live by faith not by sight." We might also say that the emotions and violence of this world are replaced by faith as the controlling force in our lives.

However, the "game" between good and evil really is finished: Christ rises triumphant over death and sin. Hope remains intact, the future is still certain, and internal peace continues despite living in a volatile world. Why? Because He has risen. If you don't believe, prove us wrong.
