WORK HARD, PLAY HARDER SAYS FMWR EVENTS COORDINATOR

HOURLASS REPORT

U.S. Army Garrison-Kwajalein Atoll's Family & Morale, Welfare and Recreation Event Coordinator Donna Pickard is ready to help Kwajalein residents work hard and play harder with some great ideas.

"I love learning new things and bringing people together," said Pickard in a recent interview with the Kwajalein Hourglass. "It doesn't take much to have fun. All you need is good people and creative thinking."

Pickard's passion for adventure and warm weather led her to depart her native Philadelphia in search of the sun.

"I never wanted to rake, shovel or scrape anything ever again," said Pickard of the move.

Before arriving on Kwajalein, the event coordinator traveled to 28 countries and 45 states. She also lived and worked in Hawaii for 25 years and acclimated to the quirks of island life.

Pickard looks forward to helping island residents make the most of their experience in the atoll with new activities and events. She also plans to build volunteer opportunities at the Grace Sherwood Library.

Pickard hopes customers will enjoy the Memorial Day Beach Bash Tuesday, May 29 at Emon Beach from 3-6 p.m. The theme is "all sun and games."

"We'll have everything," said Pickard. "There will be paddle boats, freestyle dancing, a slip and slide and bounce houses. It's going to be great."

What does Pickard have in store for the Kwaj community?

"I love games," she said. "I'd like to open the library to community game nights and even get photo tours going for Kwaj residents to practice taking great photos of their beautiful island home."

Pickard said her life philosophy guides a great part of her work here on Kwajalein.

"You can't take life too seriously," said Pickard. "You have to live it and make room to have fun. Love where you live and love your job."

MILITARY MEMORIAL WINDOW BRINGS CROWDS TO IMC CHAPEL

HOURLASS REPORT

This Memorial Day weekend The Kwajalein Hourglass honors members of the armed services and pays special tribute to those who fell in the line of duty on Kwajalein Atoll. Originally published on February 12, 1994, this news story covered the island's newest war memorial designed to honor these brave men: the stained glass window in the Island Memorial Chapel. Today we are pleased to share that story as written by former Associate Editor Jane Toma.

On Monday morning at about 10 a.m., a packed crowd faced the east wall of the Island Memorial Chapel.

A curtain fell to reveal the community's memorial to the servicemen whose sacrifices liberated the Kwajalein Atoll 50 years ago—a 15 ½ by 5-foot commemorative stained glass memorial window. The window's construction was funded by private donations from the USAKA community.

The Beginning

In early 1993 Lt. Col. Steven Thomas asked Capt. Joe Snodgrass, who dabbles in stained glass, about making a window in the chapel for the commemoration.

A Commemorative Window Committee headed by Snodgrass formed and decided to fill the entire wall with a stained glass window that represented the battles of Kwajalein Atoll. Kwajalein Resident Bill Thygerson proposed a kneeling soldier and Snodgrass' wife, Jeanne, suggested using real dog tags in the window.

Assisted by Jackie Siple, local artist Malyn England sketched the concept. Del England wrote the inscription. Beverly Field adapted the sketch into a full-scale stained glass pattern.

Realizing that the scope of the project exceeded his expertise, Snodgrass sought a professional artist and found Larry Koscho, who restored the windows in the Cathedral of Our Lady of Peace, the oldest building in Honolulu.

With a design and an artist, the project was almost ready to go but it lacked funding. Johnson Controls World Services had offered to donate the funds for the window. However, a legal ruling prohibited the donation because of the contract rebid. The committee began soliciting funds in August and by mid-January 1994 had reached its goal.

Dog Tags

The committee was also successful in its quest for dog tags. Richard Allen Saxon who was a private first class with the 4th Marine Division, donated his dog tag. Unable to attend the commemoration, Saxon sent his dog tag to atoll friends Bill and Theresa Williamson.

James E. Reaves donated a second tag. The father of resident Ann Brown, Reaves was a chief petty officer with the underwater demolition team in the 4th Marine Division that cleared the approaches to Roi and other islands. Reaves was transferred to Kwajalein during the battle and was injured in an underwater explosion.

A third dog tag bears the name Johnny G. Ballew (#3, 56 09 44). Conrad Naskone found the tag at Roi-Namur in 1991. Despite extensive research no one has been able to find additional information about Ballew. The dog tags were soldered onto the window after its installation.

The Window

In less than three months Koscho and his assistant Randy Bennett devoted over 1,000 hours to construct the window's four stained glass panels in Honolulu.

The panels arrived on Kwajalein without a scratch. Koscho and Bennett, with the assistance of JCWS personnel, installed the panels in late January. The window was covered until the unveiling.

1944 Pieces of Glass

Made of 1,944 pieces of glass, 12 pounds of solder and 300 yards of lead stripping, the window weighs almost 800 pounds. Laminated windshield glass mounted on the outside protects the panels from the salty air.

The window depicts a kneeling soldier with dog tags in hand against a radiant sky. He is embraced by cascading flags of the United States and the Republic of the Marshall Islands. Throughout the window are the hourglass unit emblems for the 7th Infantry Division and the number four in a red diamond, emblem of the 4th Marine Division. Also in the background are hibiscus and plumeria flowers and breadfruit, which flourish on Kwajalein.

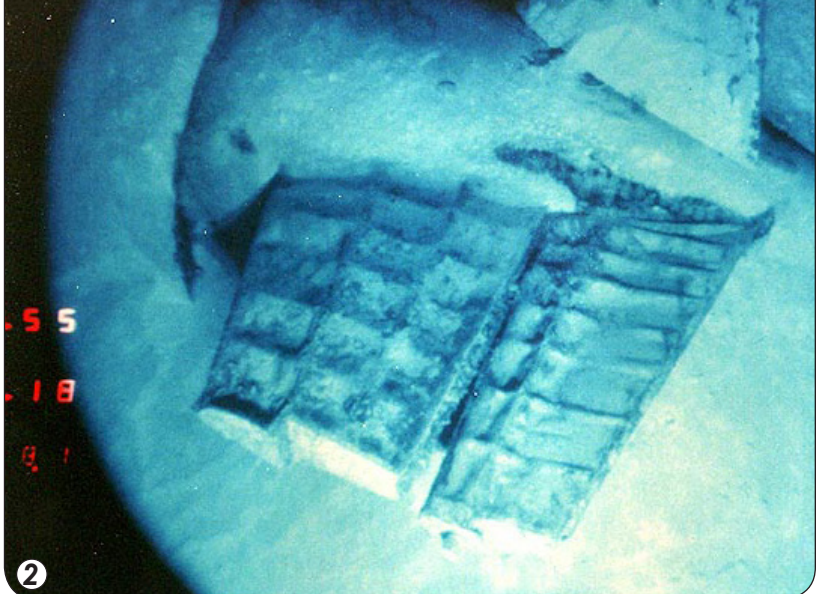

The scroll at the bottom of the window reads "In memoriam to those gallant men who paid the supreme sacrifice for freedom at Kwajalein, 50th Anniversary, February 1944." Snodgrass presented the upper half of a duplicate inscription panel to Reaves at the unveiling ceremony Monday. Bill and Theresa Williamson accepted the lower portion of the panel for Saxon.

The commemorative window is located in the east wall of the Island Memorial Chapel where it catches the morning light. The chapel, an historic site, is one of the oldest structures on the island of Kwajalein. It was constructed in 1944 from salvaged material.

At night, ceiling lights illuminate the window to provide a memorial residents and visitors can see 24-hours a day.

Editor's Notes: When this article was written, U.S. Army Garrison-Kwajalein Atoll (USAG-KA) was known as U.S. Army-Kwajalein Atoll (USAKA). The Bill Williamson referenced is the same Bill Williamson who PCS'd in April 2018 and 24 years later, the stained glass window still casts its colored light on Kwajalein Atoll and those who visit the Island Memorial Chapel.

50 YEARS LATER: THE USS SCORPION

COMMUNITY CONNECTION

By Dr. Doug Hepler
Chief Petty Officer, US Navy, Retired

May 22, 2018 marked the 50th anniversary of the loss of the U.S. Navy nuclear-powered attack submarine, USS Scorpion (SSN-589).

She sank in some 10,000 feet of water in the northeast Atlantic Ocean, carrying her 99 crewmen to their deaths. Officially, the Navy stated—and continues to insist—that the Scorpion sank for “reasons unknown.”

Faulty welds on seawater; piping to the reactor cooling system; corroded hull plates; exploding batteries; defective escape hatch seals; malfunctioning trash dispensers and a sudden loss of ballast control have all been mentioned as possible causes for the loss of the submarine.

Only five years prior, on April 10, 1963, the Navy suffered the loss of another submarine, the nuclear-powered USS Thresher, which sank off Boston in 8,800 feet of water during post-over-haul diving tests.

A court of inquiry blamed faulty silver braze welds on saltwater cooling pipes in the reactor room, which they believed caused uncontrollable flooding and the loss of the Thresher and 129 men.

One evening in July 1985, I discussed the Scorpion with an old friend, retired Rear Admiral Horton Smith, USNR, a former submariner. When I suggested that the submarine might have suffered a piping failure similar to the one that likely led to the loss of the Thresher, Admiral Smith shook his head sadly.

“You’re wrong, Doug,” he said. “She caught a Russian fish.”

“Fish” is Navy slang for a torpedo. Smith refused to talk further that evening about the Scorpion. He would never discuss it again.

In 2007, military reporter and author Ed Offley caused a sensation with the publication of his book, “Scorpion Down.” Offley spent several years interviewing former naval personnel who had served on the Scorpion prior to her last cruise, as well as members of the ships and submarines who searched for the doomed submarine after it was declared missing.

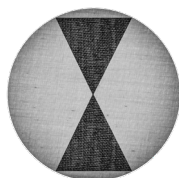

Most of the interviewees, sworn to secrecy by the Navy years ago, spoke to Offley only under the condition of anonymity. Offley concluded that the Scorpion was sunk by the Soviets—torpedoed by one of their Echo-class nuclear submarines—and that the sinking was in retaliation for the loss of their own sub K-129, which sank with 98 crewmen in 15,000 feet of water northeast of Hawaii on March 10, 1968. The Soviets believed that the K-129 was sunk by the American sub, USS Swordfish. The Russian vessel was a member of the Cold War Golf-class, which were armed with three R-21 ballistic missiles, each carrying a one-megaton warhead.

Rather than go to war over the lost submarines, Offley believes that both the American and Soviet governments, realizing their awesome responsibility in this matter, mutually agreed to forever conceal the facts about the sinking of the K-129 and the Scorpion. Neither government has ever agreed to discuss the matter. It is doubtful that the whole truth will ever be known.

However, it is essential that we do not lose sight of the human side of this subject. We must not focus solely on technical matters related to the sinking like torpedo hits and piping failures. We must not obsess over facts such as water depth, speeds and acoustic signatures.

Rather, we should remember first and foremost the lives lost: Young men who served their country during a very dangerous time, fifty years ago. If we refuse to forget their sacrifice, then they are not really gone. They deserve to be honored and remembered.

WEEKLY WEATHER LOOKOUT

RTS WEATHER STATION STAFF

WEATHER DISCUSSION. The ITCZ has redeveloped along 6N and brisk trade winds are now present across the RMI. The Madden Julian Oscillation (MJO) is in a phase favoring suppression of showers in our area. There will be little change in the position of the ITCZ for the upcoming seven days. Trade wind speeds will likely increase Saturday through Monday to 17-22 knots. Showers coverage will remain isolated and rapidly pass, resulting in normal to below normal precipitation. The MJO will evolve transitioning our area from an area heavy rain is suppressed to where it is supported in about 7-10 days from now. Haziness in our area has prompted questions if it is related to volcano ash and gas debris from Hawaii. We have analyzed trajectories of air particles since the event started in early March from the surface to 30,000 feet. The trajectories remain east of the dateline in this time frame. Dew points have been high. We believe the haze is nothing more than common salt fog or a spares amount of water vapor being observed by airborne salt particles near the ground.

SATURDAY/SUNDAY/MONDAY FORECAST: Winds ENE at 17-22 knots with isolated showers and partly sunny skies.

MID-WEEK FORECAST: Winds ENE at 15-20 knots and shower coverage increasing to widely scattered.

The Housing Office will work with the Sponsors and Organization Housing Representatives (OHR) to make appointments to complete the family housing inspections, once all BQ inspections are completed.

The goals for the inspections are: To verify the occupant(s) on file matches the occupant(s) living in the quarters; To verify the government furniture inventory assigned to that location is accurate; and to ensure all quarters meet the health and safety standards required by the system of record, Enterprise Military Housing (EMH).

During this process, Housing will make every effort to have the Fire Department present to assist with their Annual Fire Inspections.

Before inspections begin, a notice will be posted on the doors of the BQ rooms stating the day and approximate time of the inspection.

This notice will include a request for some specific information. Please complete the information beforehand and have it available for the inspectors.
