SMDC DIRECTOR TALKS RANGE FUTURE

HOURLASS REPORT

Technical experts and employees of the range community gathered at the Kwajalein Jr.-Sr. High School Multi-Purpose Room for a town hall hosted by U.S. Army Space and Missile Defense Command/Army Forces Strategic Command Technical Center Director Thomas Webber, Oct. 30.

Joining the director were USAG-KA Commander Col. James DeOre, Ronald Reagan Ballistic Missile Defense Test Site Director Col. Rod Stuckey, RTS Range Director Lt. Col. Jake Wamsley, contract leaders and employees of Kwajalein Range Systems and incoming range contractor Range Generation Next (RGNext).

Webber thanked the mission community for continued perseverance in meeting mission goals during the challenging contract transition, and he recognized that their combined efforts are what make mission accomplishment possible.

"Putting all the change aside and getting on with the business at hand is very important and appreciated by Col. DeOre and Lt. Col. Wamsley," said Webber. RGNext is set to undertake the range contract Dec. 31.

Webber lauded the community for successfully completing multiple missions in the past six months. He also recognized the vital role maintenance and supply play in the upkeep and operation of range assets such as radars and the USS Worthy.

"It's significant when you think about all the parts, pieces and expertise to keep the manlifts operating, so you can keep the radars operating," Webber said. "They go hand in hand."

Webber said the pace of range activity will most likely increase.

"Every time we get another request from U.S. Strategic Command it's for more," he said. "They want more pictures, more hours of support. It's vital and critical that we are maintaining the systems, and keeping them operational."

Webber recognized Kwajalein Atoll as a test range capable of facilitating the U.S. Army's ongoing modernization priorities and as a suitable site for testing programs related to space, directed energy and hypersonic weapons development.

"The Army is committed to developing a hypersonic weapon capability," said Webber. "DoD is committed to that. Expect that to translate directly into opportunity for Kwajalein and RTS because nobody can fly the kinds of trajectories and scenarios like we can in the Pacific."

ISLAND BRAVO TO LOCAL AMATEUR GOLF CHAMP

HOURLASS REPORT

Kwajalein resident and pilot Mike Grabowski earned a first-place finish in the Hawaii State Golf Association Maui Amateur tournament two weekends ago.

Held at the Wailea Blue and Gold courses on Maui, the tournament brought in amateur golfers from throughout the state of Hawaii and visitors from the U.S. mainland. Grabowski finished the first 18 holes at 74 shots and the second 18 at 72, inching past runner-up Thayne Costa by one stroke to clinch the win.

"The win feels great," he said in an interview last Saturday. "It was fantastic."

Many competitors taking their shot at the tournament were seasoned, accomplished amateurs either at the collegiate or mid-amateur levels. But both the rough weather and the difficult layout of the courses, Grabowski said, helped offset some player's advantages, making for a couple of competitive days of golf.

"The conditions on the first day were actually really tough," he said. "And I think that was kind of a neutralizer. And then the course on the second day was a really difficult course" littered with lava rocks, narrow corridors, rough grass and firm, speedy greens.

What made the event especially trying for Grabowski was the fact that, unlike almost all other players, he'd never golfed the Blue and Gold courses at the resort. That's not how folks normally win events, he said. Despite flying in blind, he was able to secure the number one spot in what was his first amateur U.S. Golf Association-level tournament in about six years. The win, he said, has helped rekindle his interest in competing in amateur tournaments organized by the Hawaii State Golf Association (the same organization that certifies and grades the courses at Kwajalein and Roi-Namur) in the years ahead.

A resident of Kwajalein since 2017, Grabowski is a regular at Kwajalein's Holmberg Fairways—a course that is unique, maybe a little rough around the edges, but just fine for the island's remote, little community, he said. He'll continue playing and practicing on Kwaj until the 2019 tournament season in Hawaii opens up. If he places well in enough events next year, he could be invited to play in the HSGA's Governor's Cup a year from now.

VETERANS DAY OBSERVANCE

CONSERVATION IS KEY AT ENEWETAK ISLAND

BY JARETT NICHOLS

In 2007, U.S. Army Garrison-Kwajalein Atoll and the Republic of the Marshall Islands preserved Enewetak island as a conservation area to compensate for USAG-KA's activities on other islands. The Enewetak Conservation Area (ECA) was the first conservation area to be established in the Republic of the Marshall Islands, resulting in the first memorandum of understanding between USAG-KA, the RMI and other interested parties.

The memorandum states that the authorized personnel will visit the island monthly to observe the species as well as the condition of the island. During their visits, they will observe the increase or decrease of the animal populations, signs of trespassing and check for signs of possible invasive species.

Some of the species the team keeps a close watch on are black noddies, frigate birds, black fairy terns and white terns. In 2004, when personnel did the initial biological study of the island, they concluded that Enewetak had a large number of nesting birds. During a recent visit, the team was also able to see signs of turtle nesting at the shore.

"We did see some evidence of nesting. We saw some tracks. ... We like to see evidence of nesting, and we don't see that often," said of KRS Environmental, Safety and Health employee Laure Clark.

One of the protocols before the team follows before arriving on the island is to make sure they do not bringing anything invasive with them.

One such issue on the island is the invasive species known as the Yellow Crazy Ant. These ants have been a significant detriment to the sea turtle and nesting bird population on Enewetak. The team isn't sure how the ants ended up there.

On the island, the shoreline and interior forest are very different places. The shoreline is pristine and the coral reef is doing well. The island's interior crawls with wildlife, from a dizzying number of squawking birds announcing visitors' presence, to crabs scurrying from their footsteps. Watch where you tread, or you may put your foot into a small mountain of ants.

"When you enter the forest while it is raining you can see the forest floor moving," said Clark. "Everything was trying to come in for the rain."

When asked what the future holds for Enewetak and the conservation area, Clark said: "The original plan was only to last five years, and can be cancelled at any time. So long as the funding is there and we have the green light from the RMI, we will continue."

Kwajalein residents are reminded that access to ECA is strictly controlled. Only authorized personnel are allowed on the island. The conservation status of ECA is U.S. Army Space and Missile Defense Command's decision. The U.S. Army may elect to use the island for testing if required.

KSC HAUNTS THE WRECK

HOURLASS REPORT

Who said Halloween fun ends in October? More than 50 divers and snorkelers visited the Kwajalein Scuba Club Haunted Wreck Dive Nov. 4 at the Ski Boat Shack. The annual event encourages Advanced Open Water divers to dive with a buddy on a sunken Japanese vessel billed as the most haunted wreck in the lagoon.

During the daylight hours of Nov. 4, volunteer divers and helpers assembled spooky decorations and materials to dress the wreck. After nightfall, following a safety briefing provided by KSC Dive Safety Council members, divers and snorkelers braved the pitch-black waters of the lagoon in small groups with the help of a safety line bedecked in lights.

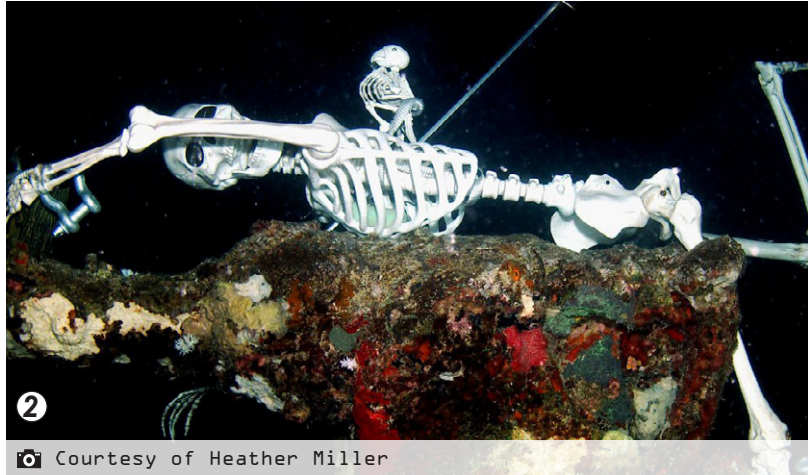

"It's eerie," said snorkeler Craig Corey. "All of the sudden it looms out at you and whoa—there's a wreck there! I had a great time snorkeling."

Divers encountered skeletal remains of fish, animals and human buccaneers on the wreck, lit by eerie glow of chemical lights. Then, if that wasn't scary enough, the wreck visitors had to find their way back to shore. Following the dive, KSC provided pizza and beverages, and gave away club T-shirts.

"Thank you to all of our wonderful volunteers," said event coordinator Kristin Miller. "We could not have done this event without you!"

WEATHER DISCUSSION

An area of disturbed tropical weather, tagged as INVEST98C by the Joint Typhoon Warning Center, is being monitored for possible tropical storm development. This area of disturbed weather will be passing near the Kwajalein Atoll region, likely as a tropical depression Saturday evening and overnight. At time of this writing to make publication deadline (Thursday 1:30 p.m.) uncertainty with strength, track and timing is still high. Therefore, please refer to the latest forecasts available on AFN 14-2 or www.rts-wx.com for better information about expected conditions this weekend.

E-WARENESS

Keep Kwajalein Clean. It's easy to keep our island clean – pick up trash and dispose of it properly, and encourage others to do the same. Try setting an example! Questions? Call Environmental at 5-1134.
