DOD PERSONNEL RECEIVE AWARDS FOR EXCELLENCE ON THE JOB

BY JESSICA DAMBRUCH

U.S. Army Garrison-Kwajalein Atoll Commander Col. Tom Pugsley recognized members of the garrison command team during an awards ceremony honoring excellence on the job. Pugsley commended team members for longtime service, perseverance and their many innovations contributions which have improved garrison operations over the past months.

“I appreciate all of you and your contributions,” said Pugsley. “You have worked together to improve life and work on the garrison. I appreciate all of your efforts.”

A relatively new USAG-KA employee of eight months, U.S. Army veteran Lois Richardson of the Resource Management Office stood out with an achievement award honoring her 40 years of service to the Department of Defense. Pugsley also thanked Richardson for her volunteerism and work ethic.

“If you didn’t know the impact Lois has had on this organization, she is a true delight,” said Pugsley.

“Not only is she personally friendly, she’s willing to go the extra mile to support the organization and her work ethic is second to none. I wish I could have you for 80 years. Lois, you are a fantastic asset to the garrison and the Army.”

Also from the Resource Management Office, Caroline Rico’s attention to detail has benefited many garrison programs over the past months.

“Caroline has reinvigorated a lot of quality assurance processes that can fall by the wayside,” Pugsley said.

Sgt. 1st Class Effie Banks, Chief Warrant Officer 3 Yessenia Johnson, USAG-KA Information Technology Officer Michael Bird and Housing Manager Scott Hill received certificates of appreciation for excellence in supporting postal operations, food services, information management, and multiple improvements in housing management, respectively.

Pugsley made special recognition of outstanding efforts by USAG-KA Engineering Chief Jacque Phelon and her vital involvement and coordination of programs related to the garrison’s many construction and refurbishment projects.

“We have very few engineers who can put in the time to lead the charettes, ensure the builds, interact with different contractors and ensure the needs of the garrison are being met—and Jacque has been doing all of that,” Pugsley said.

Getting a job done well often means knowing how to be a team player. Pugsley commended Maj. William Strouse for his team-building recommendation—a fun golf scramble—to help foster a sense of community amongst his colleagues.

“Some of us carried our teams,” Pugsley quipped. “It was a lot of fun, and there was a lot of camaraderie.”

WOMEN’S HISTORY MONTH

The Defense Department honors the contributions of women serving in the military and DOD civilian forces, celebrating the richness and diversity of their achievements in March and throughout the year.

THE KWAJALEIN HOURGLASS

The Kwajalein Hourglass is named for the insignia of the U.S. Army’s 7th Infantry Division, which liberated the island from the forces of Imperial Japan on Feb. 4, 1944. The Kwajalein Hourglass is an authorized publication for military personnel, federal employees, contractor workers and their families assigned to U.S. Army Garrison-Kwajalein Atoll.

Contents of the Hourglass are not necessarily official views of, or endorsed by, the U.S. Government, Department of Defense, Department of the Army or US-AG-KA. It is published Saturdays in accordance with Army Regulation 360-1.

Pugsley also recognized USAG-KA Safety Officer Deirdre Wyatt-Pope for her Quarterly Innovation Award idea to complete beach clean-ups in work department teams. Her solution will encourage environmental awareness and can foster a sense of work community.

Banks and Contract Management Support Officer Laura Sampayan were commended for teamwork on the Combined Federal Campaign, a project of the Office of Personnel Management that provides federal employees the opportunity to donate funds in support of scholarships, charities and other designated need-based programs.

“What you did not know is that behind the scenes, these two individuals really went out of their way to make sure the virtual kickoff campaign was fully understood, transmitted, shared with everyone,” Pugsley said. “They continued to answer questions on behalf of our higher headquarters—so much so that they actually got recognized as CFC Virtual Kickoff leaders of excellence. I want to say thank you, on behalf of everyone.”

On USAG-KA, personnel often cover or share duties when another takes a leave of absence. Assuming that delegation of authority is no easy task—especially when it is for an entire department.

“From marine to aviation to transportation, there are a lot of different and unique specialties that have to be managed,” said Pugsley. “Capt. Hardy Temoney II had the privilege to run the Directorate of Logistics for five weeks.

“The building didn’t burn down—and he did an awesome job. For that, we want to award you the Army Achievement Medal.”

While Pugsley recognized that some garrison teammates “floated to the top for excellent support services to the garrison,” others certainly flew there.

Chief Warrant Officer 3 Alex Brown surprised his colleagues by presenting the afternoon’s final award, an airbus aviation manufacturer’s certificate for achieving 500 flight hours, to Lt. Col. Ben Jackson, USAG-KA Directorate of Logistics. The time requirement was met during routine repairs for a garrison Lakota helicopter.

“It takes a lot of effort to get this award,” Brown said, of the last few hours before hitting the 500-hour mark. “We spent all day long in the helicopter trying to get one more [Lakota] up so we could meet the mission. I had to depend on a lieutenant colonel to push the buttons during our diagnostics, and we got two hours out of it. It’s a lot of work for a little bit of reward.”

Though flight maintenance is hard work, the job well done is worth every minute of the attention spent on the fine details. That same dedication is shared by each member of the garrison command team as, each day, they work behind the scenes to support the U.S. Army mission.

SENIOR CLASSES MEETS RMI PRESIDENT, EMBASSY PERSONNEL

BY JESSICA DAMBRUCH

Graduating seniors from two atoll high schools visited Marshallese government leaders and diplomatic personnel from the Indo-Pacific region on a recent spring break visit to Majuro.

The students, Ebeye Seventh-day Adventist School Jewels and U.S. Army Garrison-Kwajalein Atoll's Kwajalein High School Spartans, respectively, visited with Republic of the Marshall Islands President David Kabua and separately met personnel from RMI national government offices and the Taiwan, Japan, United States and Australian embassies to the RMI.

The trip was informative for both the students and their chaperones, they said.

"The meeting with the President was at the top of our list of activities on Majuro," wrote KHS senior DJ Chong-Gum to The Kwajalein Hourglass this week. "We talked about why it is important to understand the history of the Marshall Islands."

"The kids had a blast," said Tiareti Boutu, a Kwajalein parent who accompanied the students. "It was a fun, epic time for them."

Boutu said the students learned much from their experience, adding that they toured Nitijela facilities. Students also caught a rare glimpse of the daily life of government officials on the job.

"It was a great privilege for [the students] especially for the ones who are thinking of pursuing a future career in politics," Boutu said. "Meeting with four different embassies gave them more opportunities to learn each of these 'embassy cultures.' They learned what each country's main resources are and about their environments, customs, work, lifestyle, schools and history—and how they became involved with the Marshall Islands."

Australian Ambassador to the RMI Brek Batley shared his thoughts on the visit with The Kwajalein Hourglass following the students' visit.

"Our Deputy Ambassador gave the senior students a briefing on the work of an embassy, the close relations shared between Marshall Islands and Australia, and how to become a diplomat," wrote Batley. "Judging by the high-quality questions and fun energy, there's clearly quite a few students who could become great diplomats! There are also more people on Kwajalein who know about Canberra, Vegemite and our deadly snakes."

Kevin O. N. Nyaosi, High School-level

Head of School for Seventh-day Adventist School Kevin O.N. Nyaosi, homeroom advisor to the SDA senior class, accompanied his senior class on the visit. He appreciated that the president provided an extended audience with the SDA students.

"What a humbling experience for the Jewels [SDA students] to sit down with the Head of State, H. E. David Kabua, for more than an hour and have an informative and awesome session!"

Boutu said the KHS students questioned Kabua about working as a career government official in the RMI national government. How had he prepared for the job? He answered by challenging the students to explore the many paths available to those dedicated to public service.

"He answered their questions," said Boutu. "The Marshall Islands needs future doctors, professors and more technology experts."

Chong-Gum said he appreciated the opportunity to speak with Kabua.

"I found him to be nice and down-to-earth," Chong-Gum said. "I was really impressed that he answered all of our questions professionally and completely. The capitol building is also really beautiful."

LEADER ON A MISSION: NAUT ENTERS BGCA COMPETITION

BY JESSICA DAMBRUCH

Kwajalein High School student Mary Naut has earned the coveted nomination to represent the Namo Wetu Youth Center on U.S. Army Garrison-Kwajalein Atoll in the 2022 Boys and Girls Club of America Youth of the Year competition.

Naut will compete with youth from military installations throughout the Asia-Pacific region in the next round of the competition. By placing in subsequent rounds, finalists can earn scholarship funds and represent their installations at regional and national levels.

Child and Youth Services Teen Center Lead Rachel Raczynski said Naut was a logical choice for the staff nomination.

“Selections are made from a pool of candidates exemplifying leadership,” said Raczynski. “Mary has really stepped up this year. She’s the secretary of Keystone Club, and she has a great presence. I have noticed a lot of the younger kids really look up to her.”

Combined with her natural leadership skills, Naut’s clear goals and ability to unite her peers to accomplish their goals made her stand out, said Raczynski.

“Throughout the year, we really look for someone who has stepped into that [leadership] role. There are some students who help with that unity, and Mary is one of them.”

Among the tasks in the extensive application process, Naut must write reflective essays exploring her personal goals, values and how the military has shaped her life. She must also deliver a memorized speech to judges, Raczynski said.

Naut is passionate about climate change and the chance to share her thoughts and ideals with finalists beyond the Indo-Pacific region. She plans to give the competition her all.

“If I’m given the opportunity, I’ll go for it,” Naut said.

Offering Naut guidance and encouragement along the way is 2021 YOY finalist Andrew Strong, who along with Naut serves as a Keystone Club officer. YOY finalists are tasked to serve their peer community as mentors and role models for the duration of their selection year. For Strong, that mission includes offering guidance to future candidates. Strong also plans to reapply to the competition in 2023, he said.

“It is great that Andrew is here to offer guidance,” said Raczynski. “The competition is all about leadership and demonstrating the skills and qualities that make you a leader in your community.”

One of Naut’s strengths as a candidate is her writing talent, said Strong.

“Mary writes, and then reads, paragraph by paragraph,” he said. Of her finished product: “It’s way better than anything I did last year.”

Despite pandemic challenges, the YOY competition remains a valuable opportunity for military-connected youth around the world to serve their respective communities and to earn distinction through an Army-accredited youth program, said Raczynski.

The program had adapted its traditional programming and youth finalist conferences to online Zoom meetings and forums to accommodate pandemic travel and health restrictions for two consecutive years.

While growing accustomed to competing and meeting judges through a computer screen has posed its own challenges to contest participants, Naut has embraced the challenge.

“Mary is a girl on a mission,” Raczynski said. “Her goal is to be the first NASA astronaut who is a Pacific islander. I think YOY is the first step.”

THE LEGEND OF JEBRO

KWAJALEIN HOURGLASS ARCHIVE

By Jordan Vinson

Do you know the legend of Jebro? This feature story about the classic Marshallese folktale was first published in The Kwajalein Hourglass Sept. 17, 2017.

The information for this article was obtained from Gerald Knight's "A History of the Marshall Islands" and "Life in the Republic of the Marshall Islands," by Anono Lieom Loek, et al. The article has been edited for publication.

For years, folklore and spoken tales were important tools for communities in the Pacific region to set ethical norms and teach younger generations about how to live.

Many Marshallese mythological tales sprouted out of the creative minds of those who told them, such as the myth of the nonieb, the invisible island dwarves that make themselves known only to certain Marshallese. Other tales have their roots in stories of the night sky.

Similar to how ancient Hellenic societies assigned creative stories to groups of stars and the planets (take Orion the Hunter, for instance), the ancient Marshallese based their constellations on aspects of their own culture. Instead of rams, bulls and lions the stories contain breadfruits, frigates and canoes.

The story of Jebro is an example of a spoken tale derived from the Marshallese cultural interpretation of the stars. It is a popular tale still known today. The story follows brothers Jebro, Lumur and their mother Loktanur on an epic canoe race across Ailinglaplap Atoll, an atoll located about 120 miles south of Kwajalein Atoll.

The race pits the many sons of Loktanur against one another to see who could travel by canoe the quickest from Woja, the westernmost island of Ailinglaplap atoll where Loktanur and her sons live, to Je, located more than 30 miles away to the northeast. The winner of the race becomes Iroij or king of the East.

As the sons dash off the beach on Woja into the lagoon to begin the race, Loktanur, who has a large bundle of clunky material at her feet, calls out to her sons to let her on one of the boats to join the race. Seeing she wants to bring a bunch of extra weight on board, one by one the sons dismiss her call.

Tumur, the oldest son, shouts that Loktanur should travel with Mejdikdik, the second oldest son. Paddling out into the water, Mejdikdik tells his mother to go with Majlep, who in turn dismisses the request and tells her to go with Majetadik. So it goes with the brothers. Each one passes the burden on until Jebro, the youngest of all the sons, receives the request.

Jebro stops paddling, and Loktanur tells him to beach his canoe. "What do you mean 'beach'?" Jebro yells. "The race has begun. Hurry, or we'll be too late."

"Beach your canoe," Loktanur tells Jebro. "Then help me bring my stuff."

Jebro looks at the big bundle of heavy, useless junk at her feet and is dismayed.

"Jij, this is a race," Jebro sighs. "How can I paddle against the wind with that stuff?"

Finally, casting away any hope of winning the contest, Jebro gives up, beaches the canoe and helps his mother bring her stuff onboard. Once everything is onboard, Loktanur gets to work, and to her son's surprise, her pile of junk isn't junk after all. It's a sail.

Made of woven pandanus leaves, the sail is unfurled by Loktanur's confident hands and attached to a makeshift mast. Having never seen a sail before, men from the village on Woja crowd around the boat and stand back, amazed at how effortlessly the canoe cuts through the water with the wind.

The era of travel via pure muscle power was over, and the era of sailing had begun.

Together, Jebro and Loktanur travel quickly, working the sail's sheet to adjust for wind directions, and make up for lost time, catching up to the brothers paddling their way to Je. Halfway to Je, they come across Lumur, the oldest son, who is now too tired from paddling to continue. Taking pity on his brother, Jebro stops the canoe and helps Lumur aboard, but Lumur quickly takes control of the boat and throws his mother overboard. Jebro cuts one of the sail lines and jumps in after her, and together they swim east to Je.

Lumur, with the sail sabotaged by Jebro, and not knowing how to properly sail the canoe, makes little progress and eventually starts drifting back to the west. Jebro and Loktanur, meanwhile, swim on and on and at dawn finally reach Je, the "Island of Sunrise." Jebro has won the race.

After drifting all the way back to Woja, Lumur finishes repairing the sail and sets off for Je once again. Sometime later he reaches shore and, thinking Jebro has drowned, claims first place for himself. When Jebro comes out onto the beach, he shows that he is the winner and true Iroij of the East. Now the Iroij of Ailinglaplap Atoll, Jebro shames Lumur for his awful treatment of his mother and disdain for everyone else. Lumur turns away, sails back to the west and never again looks at his brother.

Today, Jebro is immortalized as Jeleilon, the constellation that the Western world calls Pleiades, or the Seven Sisters. It was a traditional waypoint in the sky that skilled Marshallese navigators used to help guide them on their ocean sailing voyages. Jebro is synonymous with endurance, security, peace and love.

A NASA photo of the constellation Jeleilon, known to Westerners as the Pleiades. Jebro, the good son and lover of all people, is immortalized in this constellation, which was used for navigation by Marshallese sailors.

U.S. ARMY SPACE AND MISSILE DEFENSE COMMAND HISTORY

BY SHARON WATKINS-LANG, USASMDC HISTORIAN

With the advent of the Nixon administration, many U.S. military policies and procedures underwent a review or reassessment in 1969. The Kwajalein Missile Range was no exception.

Questions had been raised about the ability of the Kwajalein Missile Range to support all services equally—the rationale being that exclusive affiliation with a command and branch of service would dictate prioritizing their needs and requirements. In each case, however, it was determined that despite the focus on ballistic missile defense missions, the range was properly operated as a national asset.

In a memorandum to the Director of Defense Research & Development, dated March 26, 1969, Charles L. Poor, acting assistant secretary of the Army for research and development, responded to the range services question.

“The KMR has clearly demonstrated its national character by successfully assuming responsibility for the operation of the former NIKE and ARPA radars,” wrote Poor.

“In less than a year, the range has improved the support to offensive systems by reducing the time required to deliver data packages and developing a radar modernization and integration plan.

“... I am convinced that the present command arrangement is the most economical and responsive. Before proceeding with an additional separation plan, I would appreciate your reconsideration of this matter with the hope that the requirement for an additional plan would be withdrawn and that the KMR could continue as part of the SENSCOM.”

Poor’s appeal appears to have been successful. The KMR remained a component of the Sentinel System Command documented in general orders and charters—or rather, it became a part of the Safeguard System Command, which replaced SENSCOM, based upon the new deployment strategy for the missile defense mission.

The Ronald Reagan Ballistic Missile Defense Test Site has been affiliated with the Army for 58 years. On July 1, responsibility for the range transferred from the U.S. Navy to the primary user at that time—the Army’s Nike-Zeus Project Office.

Please notify island veterinary services as soon as possible if you plan to PCS with your pet.

COVID has created increased delays in some necessary testing needed for most destinations outside of CONUS.

If a Fluorescent Antibody Virus Neutralization (FAVN) is needed for your PCS, it could take eight weeks to receive results.

You should allow three to six months to leave Kwajalein with your pet(s), however if you need to leave on shorter notice, Vet Services may be able to help.

RTS WEATHER STATION STAFF

WEATHER DISCUSSION

Mostly dry conditions will close out the workweek on Saturday ahead of a stretch of unsettled weather for the next few days. The subtropical ridge is expected to begin weakening north of Wake Island on Saturday, causing trade winds to relax into the low to mid-teens. Winds are expected to remain on the lighter side as the Intertropical Convergence Zone and associated moisture shifts slightly to the north. This will lead to periods of increased cloud and shower coverage through the weekend into the first half of next week as we remain along the northern periphery of ITCZ activity. Heavier, more wide-spread rainfall is expected late Saturday night through Sunday, with slightly drier, breezier conditions on the way for Monday. An upper-level trough will develop northwest of Kwajalein Atoll on Sunday, which could potentially enhance the risk of a thunderstorm or two this weekend.

Periods of heavier rain may continue through the first half of next week, with a return to dry conditions by the end of the workweek. Current model guidance suggests the development of an upper level trough over the region during the early part of the workweek, which may enhance the thunderstorm risk with heavier shower activity. The subtropical ridge will re-strengthen by the end of the week, leading to drier, breezier, and sunnier conditions heading into next weekend.

SATURDAY

Partly to mostly cloudy with stray showers, increasing to widely scattered showers late. Winds NE-E at 13-18 knots with occasional higher gusts, especially near showers. Mostly cloudy with scattered showers Saturday night with a possible stray thunderstorm.

SUNDAY AND MONDAY

Mostly cloudy to overcast with scattered showers on Sunday, decreasing to isolated showers on Monday. Showers may be heavy at times, and a stray thunderstorm or two will be possible Sunday. Winds NE-E at 10-15 knots on Sunday, increasing to 12-17 knots on Monday. Higher gusts expected near showers.

NEXT WEEK

Winds NE-E at 12-17 kts through mid-week, increasing to 15 to 20 toward the end of the week. Periods of heavier rainfall, significant cloud cover, and even a thunderstorm or two through mid-week will make way for mostly dry, sunnier conditions into the weekend.

For a detailed refresher on UXO safety, attend the new island orientation or call Kwajalein EOD at 5-1433.

UXO AWARENESS AND SAFETY CLASSES

Kwajalein Explosive Ordnance Disposal will be conducting monthly UXO hazard awareness classes on the first Wednesday of every month. Classes will not meet on holidays.

This class is a 30-minute new hire and refresher UXO class explaining specific dangers on Kwajalein. Meetings are scheduled for the first Wednesday at each month at 1 p.m. in Building 1025.

How to Register

Call 5-1550 to sign up. A maximum of 18 people may register for each class. For departments with a large group of employees we can come to your location. Call 5-1550 to schedule a class, to speak with a technician or for more information.

HOW OUR NEWSPAPER GOT ITS NAME

The shoulder sleeve insignia of the 7th Infantry Division consists of two black, equilateral triangles placed vertically on a red circular disc giving it an hourglass shape. The hourglass of the insignia was consequently used in the title of the island newspaper, The Kwajalein Hourglass.
